Roosevelt Courts War, Willkie Charges; Favors Conscription

Nominee Challenges President to Debate Tour; Backs Policy Of Aid to Britain

Comment of political leaders and the press on Willkie's address accepting the Presidential nomination, Page 15.

Elwood, Ind., Aug. 17.—Wendell L. Willkie today formally opened his "crusade" for the Presidency by boldly challenging Franklin D. Roosevelt to tour the country with him in a series of debates.

He came out flatly for conscription of America's youth for military service and thus eliminated that as an issue in the 1940 campaign.

Willkie pledged the material resources of the Nation to the aid of Britain, but denounced the conduct of the President's foreign policy.

He charged that President Roosevelt had "manufactured panics" and "courted" a war for which America was unprepared, and which it did not want.

Then, after meeting foreign policy, the New Deal, the third term and other issues in the same head-on fashion, he issued his challenge to President Roosevelt to revive the Lincoln-Douglas custom and take to the stump with him.

He flung the challenge in a blunt and often audacious speech accepting the Republican nomination for President, a speech in which he called on a vast, sun-baked assemblage of 250,000 here and Americans

Roosevelt Silent On Willkie Challenge

Ogdensburg, N. Y., Aug. 17 (AP).—After he had reviewed the 31,000 troops of the First Army at maneuvers, President Roosevelt talked with reporters and was informed of the Willkie challenge to debate.

"How does that strike you?" a reporter inquired.

The President said he didn't know, that he had heard nothing about the challenge, since he had spent five hours visiting troops.

Willkie Stand Seen Assuring Draft Passage

By International News Service

Senate passage of President Roosevelt's plan for conscription, making 12,000,000 American men between the ages of 21 and 31 liable to military service, was regarded in Capital circles last night as "assured" in the wake of the indorsement given at Elwood, Ind., yesterday by Wendell L. Willkie to some form of conscription.

Willkie's eagerly awaited pronouncement was interpreted immediately as weighing the legislative scales in favor of the New Deal's "draft" program.

With the entire membership of the House and one-third of the Senate up for reelection this year, and with members of both branches deluged with mail, the weight of which has been overwhelmingly against the draft plan, the Burke-Wadsworth bill has become a "hot potato" in Congress.

During the height of the recent hurricane which devastated the Carolina coast, a Marine officer's wife sat in the barracks at Parris Island writing a minute-by-minute account to a friend. Excerpts from this letter appear in Elizabeth Henney's column today in the Society Section.

Highlights of Willkie's Address

I charge that the course this Administration is following will lead us, like France, to the end of the road. I say that this course will lead us to economic disintegration and dictatorship.

I cannot ask the American people to put their faith in me without recording my conviction that some form of selective service is the only democratic way in which to secure the trained and competent manpower we need for national defense.

I propose that during the next two and a half months, the President and I appear together on public platforms in various parts of the country to debate the fundamental issues of this campaign.

No man can guarantee to maintain peace. Peace is not something that a nation can achieve by itself. It also depends on what some other country does. He (Mr. Roosevelt) has courted a war for which this country is hopelessly unprepared—and which it emphatically does not want.

It is a statement of fact, and no longer a political accusation, that the New Deal has failed in its program of economic rehabilitation.

The New Deal stands for doing what has to be done (to restore prosperity) by spending as much money as possible. I propose to do it by spending as little money as possible.

British Debt Cut for Naval Bases Urged

Wheeler Advocates Plan to Acquire Caribbean Sites

By the Associated Press

Cancellation of a portion of Great Britain's war debt in exchange for leases on naval base sites in Britain's Western Hemisphere possessions was advocated yesterday by Senator Wheeler (Democrat), of Montana.

Wheeler, who at times has been highly critical of Administration efforts to aid Great Britain, said it was his opinion that a deal making available to the United States in part payment on the war debts could not be regarded as an unneutral act, since it would involve only the strengthening of American defenses.

He told reporters, however, that he was "glad to see that the President is not considering trading American destroyers for these naval bases and thereby weakening our own defenses."

The President told his press conference yesterday that negotiations were under way with Great Britain for the acquisition of Western Hemisphere naval and air bases, but cautioned reporters not to speculate that a trade of destroyers was involved.

Despite this, some usually well-informed legislators continued to insist privately that a destroyer deal was "in the mill" and might be consummated in a few days by executive action.

Last night at Ogdensburg, N. Y., Mr. Roosevelt conferred with Prime Minister W. L. MacKenzie King of Canada on hemisphere defense. Before the conference he told reporters he probably would discuss some

Dynamite Found in Path Of Roosevelt

By Marshall Andrews
Post Staff Writer

Ogdensburg, N. Y., Aug. 17.—Military police removed 15 sticks of dynamite from a culvert near Norwood today, a few hours before President Roosevelt passed over on his tour of the First Army area.

The explosive was in an open wooden box, about one-third full. It was said to be of 40 per cent strength. This is an easily purchased type which is used in ordinary blasting.

Military police, who were investigating tonight, expressed the belief the explosive may have been left by a road construction gang.

In the five hours between his arrival at Norwood and the end of his tour through the First Army's nine divisions, the President traveled 110 miles in a swift-moving convoy, saw the Army's 90,000 men and their equipment drawn up in mass formation and lunched with the First Division. At every division, Regular and National Guard, the President's cavalcade halted, and 21 guns were

President Reiterates Pledge to Support Canada in Attack

Before the conference, Mr. Roosevelt had reiterated his pledge that the United States would defend Canada against any attack from overseas and indicated that the conversations might result in stronger ties with the Dominion than ever before.

Prime Minister Mackenzie King motored down from Ottawa with Jay Pierrepont Moffatt, American Minister to Canada, and began his parley with Mr. Roosevelt within a stone's throw of the unfortified bor-

U.S. Rejects German Warning, Refugee Ship Stays on Course; Nazis Renew Raids on Britain

Southwest England Is Attacked After Mysterious Lull; R.A.F. Bombs Foes

By the Associated Press

London (Sunday), Aug. 18.—German warbirds, as if roused from their roost by British attacks on France, bombarded southwest England early today and roared over the midlands following a mysterious all-day "holiday" Saturday.

The Royal Air Force, capitalizing on this interim, visited the German positions on the French coast late last night and staged a brilliant fireworks show of their own.

Rumbling explosions reverberated across the Channel, and watchers on England's bomb-pocked shore saw the sheet-lightning of bomb bursts on the Continent, along with the flare of Nazi "flaming onion" anti-aircraft projectiles and the rapier thrusts of searchlights.

Pause Unexplained

The Germans, who had laid off Britain from dawn past dark Saturday, sent a few planes over late last night, and returned to the attack on an undisclosed scale today.

Bombs were dropped over a wide area in the Midlands, but first reports said damage was comparatively slight with no casualties.

Incendiary bombs fell near a railway line in one Midland county, three high explosive bombs fell on a row of houses in one town and "works" were hit in two small villages.

Parachutes Seen

In the suburb of another town residents said they saw parachutes drifting to the ground in the light of searchlight beams.

There was no explanation why the Nazis sent over only scouting planes during the daylight Saturday after six consecutive days of heavy attack which continued up to dawn Saturday.

Observers offered two theories. One suggested that the German air command was calling time out to fill the gaps caused by the week's loss of 574 Nazi planes officially reported shot down. Another expressed belief that the Germans were using the lull to organize a still heavier air siege.

Combining with the Royal Air Force, the British navy joined in counter-blows on their Axis ene-

'Der Tag' Surprise Due From Hitler, Writer Warns

British Trapped In Berbera, Italians Claim

Troops Trying to Flee Somaliland Capital Under Air Attacks

By the United Press

Rome (Sunday), Aug. 18.—The British Somaliland capital of Berbera has become "another Dunkerque" from which British troops are attempting to escape by sea under terrific aerial bombing and assaults by Italian troops already inside the town, Fascists claimed early today.

Two official communiques Saturday claimed that the battle of Somaliland had been "won" after a two-week offensive, but made no claim to the occupation of the town on the Gulf of Aden coast.

Unofficial Fascist quarters said, however, that they believed an announcement of the fall of Berbera was imminent and pointed to the fact that it was 24 hours after the capture of the Somaliland port of Zeila before the victory was confirmed by the high command.

British in Flight

Saturday's communiques said the British had withdrawn to their second line of fortifications protecting Berbera and that British troops were fleeing on all fronts under Italian hammer blows.

Later it was reported that the communiques had referred to Friday's operations and that sometime Saturday, the Italians smashed through the British secondary line and entered the city.

The high command communique told of Italian planes bombarding a British troopship as well as a warship in Berbera harbor and informed Fascist spokesmen said that the port had become a reenactment of the British flight from Flanders, although on a far smaller scale.

The British were said in these unofficial reports to be fighting against time to withdraw aboard transports rushed from Britain's Aden base across the Gulf of Aden before the

Transport Bound Home From Petsamo Originally Received Safe Passage Pledge

By Bertram D. Hulen.

The United States refused last night to change the course of the Army transport American Legion, bearing refugees to the United States from Finland, in the face of a warning from Germany that the course chosen was unsafe.

Moreover, the State Department announced that Germany was being held to previous assurances that the transport would not be molested.

According to the Department, Germany sought at the last moment to have the course changed, but this was found inadvisable and unsafe, and, upon the recommendation of Admiral Stark, chief of naval operations and the Army general staff, the State Department ordered the transport to sail from Petsamo for New York late Friday night.

Course a Military Secret

The course was kept a military secret, but evidently Germany feared that it would take the transport close to mine fields that she has recently sown around the British Isles.

On board the transport are 897 passengers from Baltic and Scandinavian countries, many of them Americans. The American Legion left New York on July 25. She is filled to capacity.

Among the passengers are Mrs. J. Borden Harriman, United States Minister to Norway; Mrs. Frederick Sterling, wife of the American Minister to Sweden, and Crown Princess Martha of Norway and her three children.

The State Department announced its position after the German news agency in Berlin had said the Reich formally disclaimed responsibility for damage that might be caused to the American Legion on her voyage.

Assurances Obtained

Every belligerent government, the department said, including Germany, gave assurances that precautionary measures had been taken to prevent attack by their armed forces on the American Legion during her journey on a specified course from Petsamo to New York beginning August 16.

On August 9, the department continued, it notified the belligerents of

Italians Flee As British Navy Blasts Fort

By the United Press

Cairo, Aug. 17.—A British naval bombardment which climaxed a 38-day siege tonight drove the Italians out of their white-battlemented desert Fort Capuzzo, just inside the Libyan border, it was officially reported.

Capuzzo and Bardia, a nearby base, were blasted today by a naval bombardment administered by strong units of the British Mediterranean fleet. Both battleships and cruisers participated in the attack in which fleet air arm units acted as spotters to direct the fire of the gunners.

Shortly thereafter a communique of the British Middle East Command reported that scouts had found the ruins of the Italian fort deserted.

11 Italian Planes Fall

At least 11 Italian warplanes were shot down as they counterattacked battleships and cruisers of Britain's Mediterranean fleet which were bombarding Barbia and Capuzzo, the admiralty announced in London.

British fighter planes, taking off from warships, were credited with having destroyed the Italian raiders. The warships were said to have suffered no damage or casualties from the Italian bombs and none of the fleet's planes was shot down.

Capuzzo is located on the sandy desert just 4 miles within the Libyan border.

Some time before the announcement of the high command, Virginio Gayda, the authoritative Fascist editor, had declared the Somaliland phase of the developing desert war

Reich Washes Hands Of Responsibility For Fate of 900 On American Legion

Berlin, Aug. 17.—With the American Army transport American Legion two hours out of Petsamo, Finland, carrying close to 1,000 American refugees on board, the German government last night informed the American embassy that "the Reich must disclaim any responsibility for any harm which may come to the vessel."

This statement was made in the form of a verbal note the evening before the proclamation of the total blockade against England in which Germany warns all ships to keep clear of the war zone around the British Isles.

The official German news agency, DNB, tonight reports the exchange of verbal notes between the German government and the American Embassy in regard to the American Legion, and points out that her course "touches the zone of military operations and that, therefore, her passage is gravely endangered."

Germany, it is claimed, warned the American Embassy of the dangers inherent in this course on August 14, after having given assurances on August 9 that German vessels would not attack the ship.

"Irresponsibility" Laid to U. S.

Germany's Sunday morning papers accuse the United States Government of "gross irresponsibility" in refusing to change the homeward course of the American Legion.

Fuehrer Hitler's paper, the Voelkischer Beobachter, said Washington's decision was "difficult to understand" because the transport "could easily sail a less dangerous route."

The waters around Britain, the Voelkischer Beobachter emphasized, are infested with mines and the scene of "endless air and sea battles."

"It is a curious course that is being steered by the United States refugee ship and those responsible for its course," said the Lokalanzeiger. "A glance at the map shows that a direct course would lead just south of Iceland. . . .

"U. S. Is Warned"

"The United States—handing over her answer when the ship is already under way—is warned."

The official German statement reports the receipt of the first note August 9 when the "Government of the United States through a verbal note of the American Embassy, not-

The Gallup Poll

Survey Shows 60% of Voters Favor Sale of 50 Old Destroyers to Britain

By Dr. George Gallup

Princeton, N. J., Aug. 17.—Nearly complete returns in a Nation-wide poll indicate that American public opinion is in favor of selling 50 "over-age" American destroyers to Great Britain.

More than 60 per cent of voters expressing an opinion approve the proposal, which has been the subject of hot debate since it was put forward two weeks ago by Gen. John J. Pershing.

Within a few days after Gen. Pershing spoke, the American Institute of Public Opinion put the issue before the American public for its vote in a cross-section survey from coast to coast. Each State was "sampled" in the survey, and all groups in the voting population represented.

The question covering the issue was worded in two different ways, and each version was put to a separate, but comparable, cross-section of voters. The two wordings brought almost exactly the same result.

The first was:

"Gen. Pershing says the United States should sell to England 50 of our destroyer ships which were built during the last World War and are now being put back in service. Do you approve or disapprove of our Government selling these destroyers to England?"

Those expressing an opinion voted:

Approve Sale	62%
Disapprove	38

The other question was worded as follows:

"England needs destroyer ships to replace those which have been damaged or sunk. The United States has some destroyers which were built during the last World War and are now being put back in active service. Do you think we should sell some of these ships to England?"

Yes	61%
No	39

On each question approximately one voter in every 11 expressed no opinion or was undecided. On the first question the undecided vote was 8 per cent, on the second, 9 per cent.

The proposed sale of destroyers has precipitated sharp controversy, with lawyers debating its legality, and military experts and commentators its wisdom. The voting public has, of course, no special, expert knowledge of naval requirements or strategy. But in Institute surveys for the last two years or more the voting public has consistently favored all possible aid to the British, short of actually going to war.

Less than a month ago an Institute survey found that a majority of voters believed additional ways should be found to help the British in their present crisis.

In today's study the great majority of voters, in explaining the reason for their attitude, declare simply: "England is fighting our battle."

Those opposed to the sale divide about equally into two groups—those who say the United States needs the destroyers herself, and those who say the sale "would be an act of war and might make Hitler angry."

Every section of the country votes for the sale. As has been the case on nearly every question connected with aiding England and preparing for defense, the South votes more strongly for the sale of destroyers than any other section.

ATHLETES IN CONGRESS

BY VINCENT HARRINGTON

Representative from Iowa

The playing fields of Eton have nothing on the football fields, baseball diamonds, cinder tracks, golf courses and gymnasiums of the U. S. A. Take the Seventy-sixth Congress for example; its club roster of athletes, Sunday morning quarterbacks, cloakroom trainers and red sofa raconteurs vies with its Demagogues Club for eminence.

Harlan Miller

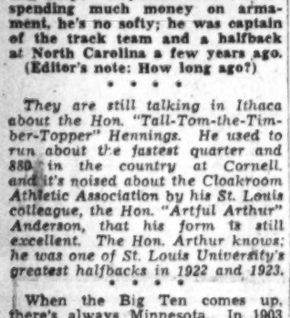
Conversation at both clubs is largely seasonal and post mortem, but the cloakroom athletes bid fair to outshine the Demagogues Club, because the Demagogues' chairman, the Hon. Martin Dies, has taken on a lot of extra-curricular activities.

* * * *

Gossip says that the Hon. Bobby Rich (of Pa.) is quite a golfer; he collects autographs rather than divots—autographs on the checks of his victims; he never cashes them, but has a trophy room filled with the signatures of his colleagues; which is perhaps the reason for his "Where-are-you-going-to-get-the-money" complex on taxes.



"—the cloakroom athletes"

Though Senator Robert "Caviar and Carpet" Reynolds doesn't favor spending much money on armament, he's no softy; he was captain of the track team and a halfback at North Carolina a few years ago. (Editor's note: How long ago?)

* * * *

They are still talking in Ithaca about the Hon. "Tall-Tom-the-Timber-Topper" Hennings. He used to run about the fastest quarter and 880 in the country at Cornell, and it's noised about the Cloakroom Athletic Association by his St. Louis colleague, the Hon. "Artful Arthur" Anderson, that his form is still excellent. The Hon. Arthur knows; he was one of St. Louis University's greatest halfbacks in 1922 and 1923.

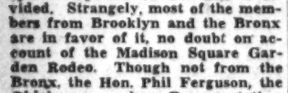
* * * *

When the Big Ten comes up, there's always Minnesota. In 1903 and 1904, when Minnesota first became a perennial Big Ten champ, there was the Hon. "(Cr)Usher" Burdick, now one of North Dakota's Representatives, who was a Big Reason why.

* * * *

Should riding be considered a sport? Opinion on the Hill is divided. Strangely, most of the members from Brooklyn and the Bronx are in favor of it, no doubt on account of the Madison Square Garden Rodeo. Though not from the Bronx, the Hon. Phil Ferguson, the Oklahoma cowboy Representative, can ride 'em, rope 'em and brand 'em with the best in the West. Besides, he shuffles a mean deck of cards.

Truly, the Congressmen are a versatile lot athletically at least.



"—Bankhead lost an argument"

No session would be complete without the Hon. Dick Wiggleworth (Mass.) He was the answer to the Harvard coaches prayer for a quarterback in prewar days, so good that Walter Camp made him an All-American. In fact, the Hon. Dick was so clever at wangling touchdowns that he was dubbed Dick Wanglesworth—the Harvard Wiggler.

* * * *

When we talk about Harvard in the cloakroom, Corcoran and Cohen get theirs, but the Hon. Ham Fish gets his, too. In fact, Ham is the only Congressman from President Roosevelt's district who ever made Camp's All-American twice. Now the Hon. Ham is interested in all-American foreign affairs and is that committee's ranking Republican.

* * * *

The Hon. Bill Bankhead, of Alabama, they say, acquired that marvelous open-field style as fullback and captain of Alabama's football team. They played home and home games with Georgia Tech. The referee was usually a Princeton, Harvard or Yale man who taught English. When Bill missed All-American one year, because he split an infinitive in an argument with the referee, a Harvard man from Georgia Tech, he swore he'd right the wrong. Now Alabama gets invited to the Rose Bowl almost every year and the Hon. William B. Bankhead is Speaker of the House.

Sumners Action Likely Tomorrow

House Rules Unit May Take Action On District Bill

By Gerald G. Gross

Post Staff Writer

Chairman Adolph J. Sabath of the House Rules Committee yesterday called a meeting of that group for 10.30 a. m. tomorrow, stirring hope that favorable action may be taken on the Sumners resolution for District suffrage.

While the main purpose of the meeting is to consider an application for a rule on the administration bill to increase capitalization of the Export-Import Bank, it is not improbable that the suffrage measure will be taken up.

Representative Hatton W. Sumners (Democrat), of Texas, sponsor of the national representation resolution, said he did not expect to attend the meeting unless invited. He went before the group last Wednesday to plead for a special rule which would give his bill privileged status on the House calendar. No action was taken at that time.

Stull Asks Support

An adverse vote by the Rules Committee would send the suffrage plan back to die in a pigeonhole of the Judiciary Committee, which reported it favorably nearly two weeks ago.

Meantime Harry N. Stull, president of the Federation of Citizens Associations, yesterday addressed a letter to Sabath, urging him to do all in his power to move the measure along. Stull also is a vice president of the District Suffrage Association.

Copies of the Stull letter were sent to all 14 members of the Rules Committee, four of whom were absent from last Wednesday's meeting. Its text follows:

"The Federation of Citizens Associations, representing 66 local bodies and some 40,000 individual members, earnestly requests you to lend your support, as chairman of the House Committee on Rules, to the movement to procure a rule for the Sumners resolution . . .

"For over 20 years the Federation of Citizens Associations has favored the principles embodied in the Sumners resolution. The vote on each occasion when the matter was before our body was overwhelming, and this, we believe, expresses the wishes and desires of the people of the District of Columbia generally on this question.

"We respectfully request that an opportunity be given to have this important resolution considered on the floor of the House of Representatives at an early date. Your assistance in securing this will be greatly appreciated."

Amendment Proposed

The Sumners resolution, if passed by both Senate and House by a two-thirds majority, would submit to the States a proposed constitutional amendment granting Congressional representation to the District and paving the way to establishment, under the auspices of Congress, of an elective city government.

As originally introduced, the resolution gave the District members of both House and Senate. On the motion of Representative Chauncey W. Reed (Republican), of Illinois, however, it was amended to strike out Senate representation.

Representative W. S. Guyer (Republican), of Kansas, ranking minority member of the Judiciary Committee, yesterday reaffirmed his enthusiastic support of the constitutional amendment plan, despite his previous statement that cession of the District to Maryland would satisfactorily solve the local suffrage issue.

Pledges to Work

Seemingly less positive about the wisdom of cession than he was last Wednesday, when he accompanied Sumners to the Rules Committee hearing, Guyer pledged not only to continue working for passage of the suffrage resolution but also for restoration of the deleted Senate seat proviso.

On the day after Sumners, Guyer and Chairman Jennings Randolph of the House District Committee, were heard by the rules group, a bill providing for retrocession of the Nation's Capital to Maryland was introduced by Representative Jack Nichols (Democrat), of Oklahoma.

The entire District of Columbia, in its present form, was part of the State of Maryland prior to 1788. In that year Maryland ceded approximately 70 square miles to the Federal Government for establishment of a National Capital, and in the following year Virginia contributed about 30 square miles. Virginia's share was retroceded in 1846.

The Nichols bill, criticized by Sumners' resolution supporters as a facetious attempt to obstruct consideration of the other plan, under which the District would retain its identity and Congress its supervisory powers over the city government, has been referred to the House District Committee.

Little Rock, Ark., Aug. 17.—The Pulaskie County (Little Rock) Democratic Committee thinks the known supporters of Wendell Willkie, who took part in Tuesday's Democratic primary, should be prosecuted.

The committee, in a resolution adopted yesterday, directed the executive committee to "ascertain from the registers . . . the names of such persons and transmit the same to the prosecuting attorney that he may proceed to take such action . . . as he is by law commanded to do."

The resolution asserted the Willkie supporters who voted in the primary did so in "open and flagrant violation" of Arkansas statutes which provide that "casting a vote in a primary of a party to which the voter does not adhere or affiliate, provided this does not apply to anyone in good faith abandoning previous political affiliations," shall be a misdemeanor.

Harrisburg, Pa., Aug. 17 (AP).—Democratic State Chairman Meredith Meyers predicted today that "dissatisfaction over the handling of the Works Projects Administration in Pennsylvania" will be the Democrats' "biggest handicap" in the November election.

"A good many Democrats have been fired and Republicans put on in their places," Meyers said. "That may mean the difference now in our rolling up the vote for Mr. Roosevelt that we did in 1936."

A Johnstown (Pa.) businessman wrote the Senate Campaign Expenditures Committee yesterday that he was soliciting his employes for contributions to aid the campaign of Wendell L. Willkie, Republican Presidential nominee, and believed that he was in his constitutional rights in doing so.

Making public the letter by Walter R. Suppes, head of a motor sales company, Chairman Gillette (Democrat), of Iowa, disclosed that he had written Suppes that after reading the appeal he could "see nothing in the action you have taken which is not fully within your right as an American citizen."

At the same time Gillette announced that the committee would hear C. B. Tuttle, a Detroit executive of the S. S. Kresge Co., in a closed session Wednesday morning in connection with a complaint that Tuttle had solicited some company employes for contributions to Willkie's campaign fund.

Senator Byrnes (Democrat), South Carolina, charged in a complaint to the committee that Tuttle's letter indicated an attempt was being made to coerce Kresge employes in making political contributions. Tuttle quickly denied any coercion was involved.

Suppes' letter to his employes appealed for donations from 25 cents to $1 for Willkie campaign funds.

"I am for Willkie for President," he wrote. "Granting you all your rights and privileges, guaranteed by your unfettered franchise as an American elector, I hope you are the same.

"Money is essential for proper promotion of the Willkie Presidential campaign. Can you spare a little for the cause? If you're disposed to give, I'll suggest a 25-cent minimum and a dollar as the maximum.

"As your employer, please understand this letter carries no threat or compulsion on your part to contribute. You, of course, have the privilege to tell us, in your own natural way, that you can afford no gift and you have other presidential favorites. . . .

"As you read this letter, consider me not the boss but a Willkie-for-President solicitor for small donations. In presenting this message I am considering you a friend and a fellow American citizen and, I hope, a good prospect for a small contribution for the Willkie campaign."

Subcommittee Hearing Planned on Complaint Of Senate Candidate

By the Associated Press

The Senate Campaign Expenditures Committee yesterday ordered investigators to Jersey City, political stronghold of Mayor Frank Hague, to inquire into a complaint by James A. Tumulty, jr., independent candidate for the Senate, of alleged "padding" of registration rolls.

Chairman Gillette (Democrat), of Iowa, said the committee had determined to send a subcommittee to Jersey City to hold hearings on Tumulty's complaint and had ordered the agents sent there to lay the groundwork for such hearings.

Tumulty filed a lengthy legal brief with the committee last week in which he charged that there was evidence that the Jersey City registration rolls had been "padded." In support of this contention, he said that registrations had increased from 148,786 in the 1936 Presidential election to 163,300 in the May 21 primary.

This increase came, he said, in spite of the fact that Jersey City lost 15,703 in population in the last 10 years, declining from 316,715 in 1930 to 301,012 in the 1940 census.

"The committee was unanimously of the opinion that there was justification for a thorough investigation of Tumulty's charges," Gillette told reporters.

He said that committee agents would be instructed to interview prospective witnesses and to arrange for the subcommittee's hearings.

South and Far West Gain House Seats Under Census

Early Returns Indicate Losses For Middle Western 'Dust Bowl,' Depression-Hit Northeastern States

By the Associated Press

Early census returns indicated yesterday that wholesale shifting of congressional seats will give the South and Far West more votes in both the House of Representatives and the Electoral College.

The figures showed probable losses of representation for the drought-ridden Middle West and the depression-hit Northeastern States.

Reapportionment of the House, however, will not be made before the Presidential election, since the final figures will not be available for a few months and Congress has the right to dictate how, if at all, the apportionment will be made.

Population Gains 6.5 Per Cent

The earliest election at which the new seating may be used will be that of 1942, provided Congress takes some action next year. Recently it passed an act providing automatic reapportionment sometime in 1942 if nothin is done at the next session. This act could be repealed, however, and even if used, might not provide new seating until 1944.

Twenty-four of the House's 435 seats were shifted about after the 1930 census, and some officials predicted the number might be even larger this time. They assumed that the total number of seats would remain at 435, as it has been since 1910.

Preliminary figures show an average population gain for the Nation of about 6.5 per cent. States which, in the last 10 years, increased substantially more than that percentage stand a good chance of getting more seats. Those which failed to gain as much or lost, stand to lose seats.

Seven Exceed Average

Of the first States to report preliminary figures, here's how they divided:

Gained more than national average: Colorado, 8 per cent; Delaware, 11 per cent; Mississippi, 8.6 per cent; Nevada, 20.8 per cent; Utah, 8 per cent; Maryland, 11 per cent; Wyoming, 9.4 per cent.

Gained less than national average: Alabama, 6.2 per cent; Maine, 6 per cent; New Hampshire, 5.2 per cent; Rhode Island, 3.5 per cent.

Lost: Nebraska, 4.7 per cent; Oklahoma, 2.6 per cent; South Dakota, 7.6 per cent.

Other probable large gainers included California and Florida. Kansas and North Dakota may be other losers.

Library Asks $1,295,755 In '42 Budget

Up 66%, Estimate Completes Fund For New Main Building

Public library needs next year will require an appropriation of $1,295,755, according to 1942 budget estimates submitted to the Commissioners yesterday by Dr. George F. Bowerman, librarian.

Representing an increase of 66 per cent over the present sum, the new budget contains $568,000 to complete the fund for the first unit of the new main library, for which $350,000 has already been appropriated. Site of the new library will be Pennsylvania avenue northwest, between John Marshall place and Sixth street.

Acquisition of a site for a branch library in Anacostia, which will also serve Congress Heights, Randall Highlands, Good Hope, Washington Highlands, Hillcrest and Twining City, would cost $20,000. No funds are asked this year for construction.

Provision for 41 new employes, 12 of whom are said to be "urgently needed," is included in the $505,695 request for salaries. The present staff of 290 in the library system this year will receive $435,380.

The rented quarters at the Chevy Chase and Woodridge branches would each receive three additional librarians in order to put the branches on a full 72-hour weekly basis. Dr. Bowerman pointed out that citizens of both communities have made urgent appeals for new buildings and full hours of service. New buildings are not possible, he said, but the service demand should be met by longer hours.

Books, periodicals, newspapers and other printed material next year will cost $80,000, as compared with $72,500 appropriated for this year. The librarian said there has never been provision for annual additions and replacements at the Petworth branch, and next year there will be another major branch, Southwestern, to take care of.

Costs Going Up

The binding bill next year will be almost doubled. Dr. Bowerman requested that $30,000 be included in the 1942 budget, as compared with $17,500 this year. He pointed out, however, that the 1941 Appropriation Act reduced the binding fund from the base of $20,000, which had been unchanged since 1934, to $17,500. While in 1934 book circulation amounted to 2,622,911, in 1940 it amounted to $3,383,997, and with Southwestern open in 1942, the circulation is likely to exceed 3,500,000.

The maintenance and repair bill will rise sharply in 1942, Dr. Bowerman predicted. He requests $86,300, as against $48,000 appropriated this year. A sum of $5,675 would be used to microfilm copies of the Star and The Post through 1918, as proposed by the Library of Congress. The entire expense would be split between the Library of Congress, Public Library and each newspaper. The $5,675 is the share of the free library. These files are essential records, Dr. Bowerman said, but the print paper is rapidly disintegrating "and should be filmed before it is too late."

The new main library building, which will also house the administrative offices of the Board of Education, is due for an early construction date. Property on the site is now being cleared of tenants.

The 1940 appropriation act carried an authorization of $1,118,000 for the first unit of the central library building. The 1940 bill carried $350,000; the 1941 bill, $200,000. The balance, $568,000, is requested in the 1942 bill.

The new branch library for Anacostia, even if Congress approves the $20,000 for a site, would not be constructed for several years. Although Dr. Bowerman did not include funds for construction, the Commissioners or perhaps Congress may include the money.

Dr. Bowerman estimated the population to be served by this branch would be 50,000. There are ten public schools, one junior high school and two parochial schools in the territory, as well as the personnel of St. Elizabeths, and the Bolling and Naval flying fields. He said the section "is cut off from other library facilities by the river and by distance. It is about 2 miles to the nearest branch, Southeastern, from the center of Anacostia.

Hearings on the District budget estimates are scheduled for August 26 and 27 in the District Building.

D. C. Suffrage Plea Taken to Elwood

Edward F. Colladay, Republican National Committeeman from the District, took word of Washington's desire for national suffrage to Elwood, Ind., yesterday.

The subject, Republican headquarters here learned, was introduced by Colladay at a luncheon in Elwood for distinguished guests at the Willkie homecoming.

He said the District citizens were grateful to the Republican nominee for having indorsed their stand for representation. Describing the absentee voters bureau which is functioning in the Republican headquarters here, Colladay said "at least 50,000 votes will be sent from Washington into the States for Willkie in November."

Miss Day Calls D. C. Beautiful —So Is She

LARAINE DAY
Who Has a Way With Her

The boys went up to the Carlton Hotel yesterday to meet Laraine Day, heralded as "one of Hollywood's newest stars," and "one of Hollywood's most beautiful stars."

Miss Day is a beautiful brunette from Salt Lake City who has achieved screen prominence the hard way—seven years of acting in stock—and has "earned a vacation in the East," according to her press agents.

Half an hour after she arrived by plane from Boston her suite looked like the Grand Central Terminal. A charming smile and inquiring blue eyes made the most pedestrian words interesting when she spoke them.

Wants to See Capitol

Miss Day of her own accord thinks Washington "is a very beautiful place. There are so many lovely trees."

She wants to see Lincoln Memorial and the Capitol like any other tourist, although she will attract more attention than the average tourist even without benefit of press agent.

Her manager and a representative of her motion picture company, traveling with her, are not unconscious of the publicity value of Miss Day as a plain tourist. Both evince a passion for photographers. In the words of one of them, "I'd stand on my head in the White House for a picture."

Working Back to Coast

Of her forthcoming picture, "Foreign Correspondent," Miss Day said, "It's an exciting spy story that I think every one will like terribly well."

"How many cities have you visited?" someone asked.

"Oh, I don't know," she replied. A hovering agent leaped into the breach. "Cleveland, Indianapolis, Chicago," he snapped. "We're working our way back to the coast."

Dies Reports Plot to Cripple Plane Plants

Communists, Nazis Plan Strike to Stop British Aid, He Says

By the Associated Press

Los Angeles, Aug. 16.—Chairman Dies, of the Congressional Committee on Un-American Activities, disclosed tonight what he said was a plot by Communist and Nazi sympathizers to call a strike in southern California aircraft factories.

Dies said seven employes of aviation plants, questioned secretly, had told him of the scheme to cripple the National Defense Program and stop American aid to Great Britain.

"Communists and Nazis have been working hand-in-hand ever since the Hitler-Stalin accord," Dies said. "They have perfected a fine organization."

List of 1,200 Bundists

Dies said he could not disclose the names of his informants, but that his investigation on Nazi and Communist activity in Hollywood, the shipping industry and aircraft unions has "provided more information than I have obtained in the last two years."

A list of 1,200 sympathizers obtained from the German-American Bund was declared to contain 900 in Los Angeles County. Among them a former sheriff, high school, college and university teachers; aircraft and metal craftsmen, mechanics and oil workers.

"Those found in key positions in defense industries will be examined under oath to find out just how deep their sympathies are," said Dies.

Meanwhile, at the request of the Motion Picture Producers' Association and the Screen Actors' Guild, Dies announced that everyone in the film industry who has been accused of being a Communist or sympathizer would be given a hearing.

$10,000 for Browder

"If they do not volunteer before the conclusion of the investigation they will be subpenaed and required to testify," he added.

"The name of every actor or actress, no matter how popular or wealthy, will be announced to the public as cleared or found guilty."

Dies said "we are informed some very prominent Hollywood people" were at a meeting some time ago at which $10,000 was reported subscribed to the campaign of Earl Browder. He added, however, that many may have attended "in entire innocence."

Barton to Address D. C. Willkie Club

Representative Bruce Barton, of New York, will speak at a membership committee meeting of the Willkie-McNary Campaign Club Tuesday at 8 p. m. in the Willard Hotel, the club announced yesterday.

The campaign club yesterday also notified its members of changes in the absentee voters' election laws since 1938 in the various States. In Maryland permanent registration in Baltimore City and Washington County is now authorized if a voter casts his ballot every four years. Montgomery County passed this same legislation for the 1938 election. All other counties throughout Maryland, however, will have intermediate registration.

Florida has completely amended its election laws and vote by mail has been declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court.

Nazis Resume Assault After Mystery Lull

Bomb Southwest Of England, Roar Over the Midlands

miles, both in Africa and Europe.

The air ministry reported Friday night raids by British bombers on German targets and enumerated assaults on important military targets.

"Widespread successful attacks," one communique said, included the Messerschmitt aircraft plant at Augsburg, the Junkers assembly plant at Bernberg, railroads in the Ruhr, the Zeiss military precision instrument plants at Jena, and a German antiaircraft ship in Stavanger Fjord, Norway.

An earlier air ministry report said "very large damage" also had been inflicted on the great synthetic fuel plant at Leuna, near Leipzig, where coal is transformed into gasoline.

A hundred bombs set off a chain of fires marking almost the entire area of the more than mile-long main plant which "normally produced 400,000 metric tons of synthetic oil annually," it said.

In the face of Germany's proclamation of a total blockade of the British Isles, Britain intimated that her own blockade of Germany had been intensified.

Channel Called Dangerous

The admiralty warned that the English Channel and the Bay of Biscay—possible commerce lanes between Germany and the western Atlantic—were dangerous for navigation without routing instructions from British officers.

The admiralty announcement made it plain that Britain, too, is using mines anew for her own blockade of the German-dominated Continent, and indicated mine belts had been laid in the vicinity of Lands End, southwest tip of England, to Brest, and from Brest along the French coast to the Spanish border.

[The Bay of Biscay is being used by American freighters under neutrality act provisions allowing trade with Spain and Portugal.]

Germany's declaration was described by the ministry of information as apparently an attempt "to divert British attention from German projects of invasion or from a move which she may contemplate in some other direction."

"Germany's accusation against Britain of having violated international rules of sea warfare comes singularly and inappropriately from Germany," the ministry said.

Pointing out that Germany has sunk 786,162 tons of neutral shipping since the start of the war, it declared "this, however, has not deterred neutral vessels from seeking the safety of British convoys. Therefore it is most improbable that Germany's words of warning will succeed now where violent deeds have signally failed."

German Pilot Captured

Nazi bombers thundered in destructive raids on Wales during Friday night and followed them up with three attacks in the south and southeast.

At least one German plane was shot down over Britain yesterday and its pilot captured before the mass assaults slacked off.

One death was caused and several civilians were injured in early morning raids over Wales.

Many Britons were left homeless by the first week of Nazi air siege, which has hit heavily also at Britain's harbors, airports, factories and warhouses.

Even as funds were being collected for the relief of the homeless, other homes were destroyed by delayed action bombs exploding yesterday morning in a southwestern London suburb which the Nazis raided late Friday.

15 Parachutes Found

Fifteen parachutes believed to have been released from a German plane were picked up Saturday in the northeast coastal area. There was no evidence that they had been manned.

At the same time the ministry revised upward its figures of German planes destroyed, reporting 75—not 71—Nazi raiders had been shot down during Friday's "very much smaller" scale attacks and insisting that a new check of Thursday's air battles showed 180 invading aircraft "certainly destroyed." The previous figure for Thursday was 169. British losses Friday were put at 22, and for Thursday at 344.

the proposed departure on August 16. The German government specifically stated that since the American Legion is a military vessel of the United States Government it would, of course, in any event, be immune from molestation.

Subsequently, the department said, Germany alone tried to modify her assurances, which modification the United tSates Government could not accept because no other safe course existed. The German government was notified accordingly and the vessel sailed on the day scheduled and on the course previously outlined to each government, including Germany.

Food Running Short

The Government of the United States, the Department declared, continues to hold the belligerent governments to their assurances.

In addition to all other considerations, it was explained, the food on the American Legion was running short and this food could not be replenished at Petsamo or anywhere on the way to New York.

The ship is under naval operation.

Under orders from President Roosevelt, the transport left New York July 25, under the command of Capt. B. E. Thorning with a crew of about 225.

Her sailing was surrounded by such secrecy that officers at the Brooklyn Army Base refused to admit that she was about to leave.

The vessel arrived at Petsamo August 5. She is well identified with American flags painted on her decks, her sides and her stern. Floodlights play on these flags at night.

Passengers Lived in Tents

Many passengers had to live in tents in Petsamo until the ship arrived. Passengers were vaccinated against smallpox and typhoid before sailing and were forbidden to discuss politics.

The ship was slowed down considerably in leaving Petsamo as she had to be piloted through mine fields.

The American Legion, formerly operated by the Munson Line in the South American-New York trade, was taken from retirement at Baltimore and put into use as an Army transport last year.

Neutrality Law Referred to

By the Associated Press

The United States neutrality law which Germany referred to in her announcement of the British blockade forbids American ships, with some exceptions, to visit the ports or sail in the waters of nations declared by the President to be at war.

The law authorizes the President to define combat zones, areas of dangerous water, into which American ships may not go. The European zone, as presently defined, closes to United States ships all waters around Europe except those touching Portugal and a part of northern Spain.

Exceptions are provided in the law for ships which enter a belligerent port or a combat area to bring out Americans and for ships carrying Red Cross supplies and personnel. Another proposed exception, before Congress, would permit American ships to call at belligerent ports for refugee children if belligerent governments give them safe conduct guarantees.

Scores of neutral ships trading in English waters under charter to American firms are expected to be affected. The United States Lines alone operates six ships under the Belgian flag between New York and England.

fied the Reich that the Army transport, American Legion, would sail on August 16 from Petsamo," and that "the vessel would bear certain markings during the day and at night likewise would be illuminated. The vessel was to adhere to a certain course which, incidentally, would take her between the Island of Rona and Cape Wrath on the north coast of England.

"The Reich answered that in this case assurances were unnecessary since it was obvious that the German armed forces would not attack the vessel of a neutral army.

Five days later, on August 14, according to the German statement, the Reich government informed the American embassy that "such a course would touch the zone of military operations and that, therefore, her passage was gravely endangered. It was urgently warned, therefore, to send the American Legion on a less dangerous route on her return trip. . . . It was particularly pointed out that the coastal waters off England were completely infested with mines."

"On August 16," the German statement continues, "the American Embassy informed the Reich government through a verbal note that the 'American Legion' was sailing from Petsamo on the . . . route originally described.

"The foreign office thereupon informed the American Embassy on August 16, through a verbal note, that the ship was sailing through the operations zone in spite of the warning and in full recognition of the dangers."

"The Reich's goverment," the official statement continues, "must disclaim any responsibility for any harm which may come to the vessel.

"Responsibility must lie alone with the Government of the United States."

Any inhibitions which may have hampered the Third Reich in its war to destroy the British Empire were removed today when Germany officially proclaimed a "total blockade" of the British Isles.

At the same time authoritative quarters in Berlin declared the Reich no longer feels itself morally bound to respect the inviolability of open enemy cities—which means that the Germans now feel they may, with clear conscience, unleash a fury of sudden death from the skies, on Britain.

In an official proclamation, tantamount to a declaration of unrestricted naval and air warfare, the Germans fail specifically to delineate the exact geographical location of the areas in which all shipping will be attacked without warning. The official news agancy, DNB, however, declared that the most important harbors, and mouths of British rivers were already mined and that last night the Reich's aeroplanes mined the Irish Sea and St. Georges Channel, as well as the North Channel.

The official proclamation declares the Reich has warned neutral governments to keep their ships from the Anglo-German war zone for the "war at sea in the territory about England is now being waged in the fullest scope."

Mines already have been laid within all that territory, the Germans add, and airplanes will attack every ship. "So," the Germans stated, "every neutral ship which voyages into this territory in the future exposes itself to destruction."

By keeping their ships from this area, the Germans declare, neutral states "will, on their part, do the utmost to aid the prevention of complications and assist in the rapid ending of this war."

In carrying out this blockade, which is designed to cut off the British isles from all sources of vital raw materials, the Germans declare they will make use of the very satisfactory strategical situation in which as a result of their occupation of the mainland coast from the Bay of Biscay to North Cape they now find themselves, as well as the "superiority on the sea and in the air held by the German forces about England."

Neutral quarters, however, express the opinion that a blockade is only a blockade when it can be enforced. Whether the Germans will be able to cut off the western coast of Britain from the rest of the world remains to be seen.

Meanwhile the press declares unanimously that what the British have so far experienced of the attacking might of the German armed forces is but a "mosquito bite." The German attacks, it is stated, will become progressively more intense.

Today, however, the German air force seems not to have engaged in any spectacular activity. Ports on the British west coast, the Germans assert, were bombed as reconnaissance flights were carried out over all England as well as the North Sea and the English Channel.

British antiaircraft batteries were bombed and strafed by machine guns, particularly on the southern coast, the Germans assert. British pursuiters, they add, did not show much interest in engaging the German machines in battle. Although no figure of enemy losses in the air today was released, the Germans assert, three of their machines have not yet returned to their bases.

The Germans unofficially admit that British planes attacked the gigantic Leuna plant of the German chemical trust and dropped bombs in the course of the attack.

"The attack on Leuna," informed quarters declared, "had no definite destructive results." "In fact," it was added, "if any damage were done by the few bombs dropped, it was inconsequential, for the plant is operating at full strength, as usual."

Ohio Youth Wins Flying Contest

E. F. Scanlon Gets $1,000 as Best CAA-Trained Pilot

Edward Francis Scanlon, 21, of Steubenville, Ohio, who made Phi Beta Kappa and got a yen for flying and surgery, took the top award of $1,000 in the inter-collegiate aviation scholarship contest finals here yesterday.

The award identifies him as the best pilot trained under the Civil Aeronautics training program. He was one of the seven young pilots, regional winners, who engaged in the finals before Army, Navy and Marine Corps officers at Bolling Field.

Second scholarship award, $750, was won by Jefferson Davis Lewis, of Tallahassee, Fla. Third scholarship of $500 was taken by Waldo Elmer Schroeter, of Reedley, Calif.

To Keep Up Flying

Scanlon was graduated from Kenyon College, Gambier, Ohio, in June, was vice president of the Medical Club, the Flying Club and the student assembly. He plans to enter the College of Surgeons at Columbia University and will concentrate on flying in the summers, he said.

He brought his instructor, Donald M. Gretzer, here to witness his showing in the finals. "He was a good student," Gretzer beamed when Scanlon won.

Lewis, 21, was graduated in June from the University of Florida. He was among the first 25 of his class and will use his money toward buying a plane.

Wants to be Instructor

Schroeter, 22, is a senior student in agriculture at the University of California. He will use his scholarship money in preparation to become a pilot instructor, he said.

The checks were presented by Assistant Secretary of Commerce Robert H. Hinckley, in his office at 6:30 p. m. Maj. Lester D. Gardner, executive vice president, Institute of Aeronautical Sciences, which sponsored the contest, said the judges were hard put because the showing of all seven contestants was good. The Shell Oil Co. financed the enterprise.

Bad weather kept the pilots grounded here most of last week. They had been scheduled to compete on Thursday. They went to Bolling Field, looking at the sky yesterday. They had agreed among themselves that if unfavorable weather continued they would be willing to split the scholarship money.

Hinckley Liked It

Hinckley said that he liked that spirit.

The judges were Lieut. Charles Parker, Marines; Capt. A. W. McCoy, Army; Lieut. Comdr. J. W. Geppert, Navy; Prof. Frederick K. Teichmann, Daniel Guggenheim School of Aeronautics, New York University, and Maj. Gardner.

The remaining contestants, who had won in their regions in a total field of 10,000 aspirants, were John Lincoln Lambert, 20, of Baltimore, University of Maryland student; James Grant White, of Brownwood, Tex.; Barbara Jane Erickson, of Seattle, and Arden Ellwood Hixson, of Wichita, Kans.

Contracts Let for 404 Army Training Planes

Copyright, The New York Times.

Announcement of award of contracts for 404 military training planes to cost $5,432,894 was made yesterday by the War Department. Completion of arrangements to acquire 1,617 acres of land near Ogden, Utah, for a $8,165,000 general supply depot to service the Pacific Coast and the Mid-West also was announced.

Coincidentally, the Navy Department made known that it had awarded contracts for $18,012,500 worth of improvements and construction work at the naval base of San Pedro, Calif.

Marine Corps League Urges Draft Bill

Detroit, Aug. 17 (AP).—The Marine Corps League, with a resolution "viewing with alarm the dilatory attitude of Congress," was on record today as favoring enactment of a selective military draft law "with all possible dispatch."

Approximately 3,500 members of the league, in annual convention here, adopted the resolution last night.

Plan to Mobilize Health Workers

Boston, Aug. 17 (AP).—Hospital officials from every State and from Canada were summoned today by the American Hospital Association to meet next month to discuss plans for mobilizing 2,500,000 health workers behind the Government's hemisphere defense program.

Surgeon generals of the United States Army, Navy and Public Health Service will address a special general session of the convention, September 16 to 20, officials announced, to explain preparedness plans.

Ship Line to Hold Draftees' Jobs Open

New York, Aug. 17 (AP).—Moore-McCormack Lines, operators of ships between the United States and South America, said tonight that it would hold open the jobs of any employes called for military service under conscription. Jobs and seniority rights will be returned to workers as soon as they are discharged from military service, the firm said.

Dutch Towns Must Suffer For Saboteurs, Nazis Decree

By the Associated Press

Amsterdam, Aug. 17 (Via Berlin).—The commander of the German army in the Netherlands warned the Dutch today that henceforth, the community where any acts of sabotage are committed as well as the community of the guilty one's birth will have to "pay a high price."

Declaring sabotage had been continuing, Gen. Friedrich Christensen predicted possible death penalties for offenders against the German occupation and for persons concealing military enemies.

The warning was issued after a heavy British bomber made a forced landing north of Brandt today, and six British crewmen escaped after changing into civilian clothing.

[Informed British sources described the story as "ridiculous." British bomber crews carry no extra clothing, they added.]

U. S. Volunteer Dies Of Air-Battle Wounds

London, Aug. 17 (INS).—William M. L. Fiske, American Olympic bobsled racer and husband of the former Countess of Warwick, died today from wounds received as a fighter plane pilot of the Royal Air Force in combat with German bombers Friday.

He was the first of the American volunteer fliers to lose his life in the service of Britain. He was the son of W. M. L. Fiske, wealthy banker and partner in the New York brokerage firm of Dillon, Read & Co.

3 U. S. Ambulance Men Get Croix de Guerre

Vichy, Aug. 17 (AP).—Three American ambulance drivers were awarded the Croix de Guerre with special citations by the French government today for bravery in action.

They are Charles Willen, New York; Thomas Esten, Paris, formerly of Boston, and Jack Calhoun, Paris.

Bomber of Reich Canal Gets Victoria Cross

London, Aug. 17 (AP).—King George awarded the war's seventh Victoria Cross today to Acting Flight Lieut. Roderick Learoyd for "most conspicuous bravery" in bombing Germany's Dortmund-Ems Canal from 150 feet the night of August 12, in the face of intense antiaircraft fire.

Germans Say British Bombed Goethe Home

Berlin, Aug. 17 (AP).—Germans declared today the British had bombed Weimar, the home of the famous poet, Johann Wolfgang von Goethe, and described the attack as a "cultural disgrace."

They said British bombs fell on the front of the Goethe house, adjacent to Goethe Park, and on a Red Cross station. Damage was described as slight and apparently no lives were lost.

Swedish Ship Reported Sunk by U-Boat

New York, Aug. 17 (AP).—Sinking of the 3,500-ton Swedish freighter Hartos by a German submarine was reported today by the British Broadcasting Corporation in a shortwave broadcast heard by the National Broadcasting Co. Twenty-seven survivors, landed at an English port, said their ship was torpedoed in broad daylight. (The Hartos is not listed in Lloyd's registry.)

Mrs. Dyson Buried In Beallsville, Md.

Germantown, Aug. 17.—The funeral of Mrs. Lena M. Dyson, 68, wife of Dr. Vernon H. Dyson, who died at her home here after a long illness, was held at the home yesterday afternoon. The services were conducted by the Rev. Thomas F. Opie, rector of St. Bartholomew's Episcopal Church, Laytonsville. Burial was in Monocacy Cemetery, Beallsville, Md.

Mrs. Dyson was a daughter of the late Israel G. Warfield and was a lifelong resident of Laytonsville and the vicinity. Besides her husband, she leaves a sister, Mrs. Frances Webb, Washington, and two brothers, Dr. Robert C. Warfield, Rockville, and Elisha Warfield, New York.

Gaithersburg Corps to Compete

Barber-Briggs Drum Corps, of Gaithersburg, Md., will be one of the 20 drum and bugle corps of Maryland which will compete Labor Day at Baltimore's Municipal Stadium, for the State open championship.

The occasion is the First Annual Junior Drum and Bugle Corps Contest and will begin at 7 p. m.

Rockville Students Place in Contest

Agricultural students at Lincoln Colored High School, Rockville, Md., placed sixth in the annual stock and grain contests at Arkansas State College, Pine Bluff, this week, according to H. H. Morton, agricultural teacher and coach of the team.

Included on the team representing Maryland were Harry Stewart, John Owens, of Rockville, and Allnutt Reed, of Calvert County. The boys received training at Ayrlawn Frams through the efforts of County Agent C. W. Anderson.

HAY FEVER and ASTHMA

Science has not yet found a preparation which will give relief to all hay fever and asthma sufferers. This is understandable when one realizes that both of these conditions can be caused by many things, such as various pollens from flowers and weeds, perfumes, animal hairs, improper diet, etc. However, science has discovered that many cases of hay fever and asthma get amazing relief from the administration of a certain vital food element. Allersen, a rich source of this important element, gives relief to thousands of sufferers year in and year out. In fact, if Allersen is taken early enough, hay fever and asthma can often be prevented. Allersen is put up in inexpensive, easy-to-take tablets. Trial size, 20c; regular size, $1.00; economy, $2.00.

Mahogany finish at this price. French walnut and bleached mahogany slightly higher.

These pianos were part of a lot sold for shipment abroad, but unforeseen war conditions changed that, so the manufacturer disposed of them quickly in this country at a greatly reduced price for cash. They are the type of spinet that usually sells for $295, as you can tell by their features and appearance when you see them, but we bought them right, so can afford to sell them at this bargain price. Made by the country's largest piano manufacturer (you will recognize the name when you see it but we agreed not to advertise it) they are unusually sturdily built to withstand ocean shipment and climatic changes . . . strings are corrosion-proof, action is damp-proofed and the finish is the most durable known. If you are looking for a real value see these spinets tomorrow and you will agree with us when we say that at this price they are a value you will probably never see again.

fired. After a few words of greeting with the division commander, the President moved on.

Everywhere except at the Twenty-ninth Division, District, Virginia and Maryland National Guard, he was told of the need for new equipment. At the Twenty-ninth, he asked Maj. Gen. Milton A. Reckord, commanding:

"There's a little shortage in equipment, I take it?"

"Oh, the newspapers are playing that up," Reckord replied. "We are getting along very nicely."

While the Twenty-ninth waited on the road between Rensselaer Falls and Woodbridge Corners, the eight bands of its regiments, massed under Lieut. Melvin MacCoul, leader of the First Virginia Infantry Band, played martial airs. Alternating was the drum and bugle corps of the Fifth Maryland Infantry.

Ten minutes before the President arrived, Maj. Gen. James K. Parsons, commanding the Third Corps, of which the Twenty-ninth Division is part, drove up and was greeted with military ceremony. He was with Gen. Reckord when Mr. Roosevelt appeared.

Heat Fells 30

The President chatted a few minutes with Parsons and Reckord. Parsons, who is to retire shortly, mentioned that this probably is the last maneuver he will attend. In the automobile with the President were Secretary of War Stimson, Gov. Lehman of New York and Lieut. Gen. Hugh A. Drum, commanding the First Army.

Authorities of the 104th Medical Regiment said they treated 30 men for heat prostration after they had stood in the sun two hours waiting for the Presidential party.

Some of them had been there in trucks six hours.

Military police of the Twenty-ninth on guard in the inspection area and along the route were deprived of their sidearms, by Secret Service order, division officers said. Those of other divisions, however, retained pistols and rifles.

The Twenty-ninth will attend church services tomorrow. Many boys go to the military field mass in the stadium of St. Lawrence University at Canton. The celebrant will be Maj. John M. Bellamy, assistant chaplain of the First Army. The Twenty-eighth Division will hold its annual memorial service for its war dead near Lisbon.

Mackenzie King, Roosevelt Confer

They dined alone, and then the President's train was moved from Ogdensburg to the nearby, quiet village of Heuvelton.

At a press conference preceding the conversation with Mackenzie King, Mr. Roosevelt was asked whether the prospects of stronger ties with Canada meant that "we'll defend Canada." He referred to a statement made two years ago to the day, that the United States would not stand idly by if the Dominion were threatened and said his words still were good today.

That declaration was made originally, in the presence of the prime minister, at the dedication of the International Bridge at Kingston.

On Informal Basis

The conference tonight was pitched on an informal plane, in contrast with customary diplomatic protocol. But it was in keeping with the fact that the participants have been close personal friends for years.

There was to be no additional news on the meeting tonight, Mr. Roosevelt let reporters know, but he said he might have something to say about it tomorrow.

Moffatt and Secretary of War Henry L. Stimson, who directed foreign affairs as President Hoover's Secretary of State, also were on hand for tonight's historic conference.

British Trapped, Italians Claim

Italians can capture the main force of British defenders.

Fighting in City

The British were said to be fighting a fierce rear-guard action on the city's outskirts with Italian columns closing in "from all sides."

An extraordinary communique Saturday, the second of the day, told of the capture of huge quantities of munitions, foodstuffs and prisoners and said hundreds of British had been killed.

(The British already had said they would not send reinforcements to the Somaliland troops and had taken the position that Italian victories there were of small ultimate importance.)

French Fight Raiders

Cairo, Egypt, Aug. 17 (AP).—French airmen operating with the Royal Air Force fought off an attempted Italian bombing raid on Berbera, capital and chief port of British Somaliland, R. A. F. headquarters reported today.

A communique announced the Frenchmen shot down one Italian bomber and put the others to flight, while British bombers meanwhile attacked the Italian-held port of Zeila and other military targets and troop concentrations.

Native Somali troops form the backbone of the British defense at Berbera, and they are fighting against heavy odds.

It was to relieve the pressure on these troops that R. A. F. bombers attacked the Italian advance lines and rained tons of explosives on Zeila, the Italians newly captured coastal base, and nearby islands on which troop concentrations or other military objectives were found.

Somalis still are holding their reserve positions despite artillery bombardments and attacks from the air, the British say.

could be considered ended in Italy's favor.

Within a few days, he said, that primitive, half-waste, long a part of the British Empire, would fall into Italy's expanded territories.

Thus, he added, would Italian forces be put in better position for the expected attack upon the British Aden, across the gulf near the mouth of the Red Sea, a vital area in British Empire communications.

(The British had said nothing about retiring from the Somaliland. On the contrary, they reported the Royal Air Force was "continuing to harass enemy troop movements;" told of the bombing of the Italian-occupied port of Zeila in the Somaliland, and announced that French airmen had cooperated with the British in driving off an Italian air raid on Berbera, Somaliland's capital.)

For 38 days it has been under siege by the British. At times the Italians have withdrawn from the fort itself to a trench system outside. It was not disclosed tonight whether the trenches as well as the fort had been abandoned.

However, the British patrols made certain that the fort was now vacant and untenable due to the incessant British attack. British forces can now enter the strong point if they desire, it was said.

Capuzzo first sprang to notice when British armored forces captured it after an intensive aerial bombardment by the R. A. F. on June 14.

The British removed everything of value in the fort, including trucks, machine guns, motorcycles, medical supplies and radio equipment. Then they withdrew and only occasional British patrols entered the fort, seeking souvenirs.

had been looking for weeks toward Willkie for some definite pronouncement for or against a "draft" measure. Convinced yesterday that he is definitely proconscription, many members of Congress planned on making this a definite issue in their own "back-home" campaigns.

Members of House and Senate, regardless of party lines, were frank to predict prompt Senate concurrence in House amendments to the mobilization bill which will permit Mr. Roosevelt to call out 400,000 National Guardsmen and Army reservists for duty "in any part" of the Western Hemisphere.

Opponents of the conscription bill had insisted until yesterday that Willkie would take a definite stand against a peace-time draft of American youth. They had contended persistently on the radio, on the floor of the Senate and in press interviews that peacetime mobilization might lead the Nation into "dictatorship."

Visibly shaken by Willkie's indorsemetn of conscription, opponents of the draft bill rallied last night behind the Maloney amendment which would prohibit the conscription measure from becoming effective until January 1. Under the terms of this amendment, the Army would be required to obtain as many volunteer enlisemtns as possible and the draft measure would become effective January 1 only if the voluntary enlistment program had failed.

Two or Three Votes to Decide

Week-end polls by Administration and opposition leaders indicated clearly that the big test in the Senate on conscription will come on the Maloney amendment. Latest figures from both camps indicated that this entire issue probably will rest on two or three votes.

Despite Willkie's pronouncement for conscription, Senate opponents of the measure told newsmen they would continue to fight against the New Deal's plan for drafting a "peace-time civilian" army.

They contend that their strength was increasing day by day and that before the end of next week, they would command sufficient votes to consign the draft bill to the "unhappy fate" which greeted the proposed enlargement of the Supreme Court.

"There isn't the slightest indication that Willkie's stand will swing votes from the substitute," Maloney told the United Press. He claimed passage of the amendment by seven or eight votes.

Senator Burton K. Wheeler (Democrat), Montana, isolation leader, said that Willkie's remarks could be interpreted as favorable or unfavorable to conscription.

"Dealt With Generalities"

"Voluntary enlistments are on a selective basis in that they take only those who are fitted for service," Wheeler argued. "He dealt with generalities without stating whether he is for compulsory military training in peacetime, but undoubtedly it will be so interpreted by those who favor conscription."

Senator Guy M. Gillette (Democrat), Iowa, called Willkie's views on conscription ambiguous.

"On conscription, I am one who does not oppose the principle," Gillette said. "I feel, however, that it should not be put into effect during peacetime. Yet I could agree with Willkie's statement and so could Senator Edward R. Burke (conscription bill co-author").

British War Debt Cut Is Urged for Naval Bases

specific defense proposal and course of action.

Meanwhile, the National Defense Commission was reported to have undertaken a survey of widespread proportions, looking toward the location of defense industrial plants in all sections of the country. These plants, it was understood, would manufacture such critical defense items as airplane cannon powder and parts for tanks and planes.

The Senate marked time for the week-end on conscription legislation, scheduling resumption of debate tomorrow on the Burke-Wadsworth compulsory military training bill requiring the registration for possible service of all men from 21 through 30 years of age.

A Senate Appropriations subcommittee polished up a $5,006,000,000 supplemental defense appropriations bill for consideration by the full committee tomorrow and Senate action probably late in the week. The subcommittee added $34,000,000 in direct appropriations and $10,500,000 in contract authority for the Army and Navy to the $4,963,000,000 previously voted by the House.

How the United States might obtain leases on naval bases in this hemisphere still remained a White House secret after the President's statement. He said that defense negotiations were underway with Canada and this led some legislators to speculate that destroyers might be turned over to that country.

Wheeler said he thought that cancellation of a portion of the war debts would be the most sensible way of obtaining bases which Gen. George C. Marshall, Army Chief of Staff, has said would be "extremely useful" in guarding the Panama Canal and protecting against possible invasion from the Atlantic. Most talked of sites for such bases were at Trinidad, in the British West Indies, and Newfoundland.

Trinidad—where Columbus discovered the South American mainland in 1498—was described as the "most important" location for a major base to guard the new-vulnerable southern approaches to the Caribbean and Panama Canal. Britain has a small naval station there at present.

Brig. Gen. George V. Strong, chief of the Army war plans division, who is now in London as an European war observer, said only recently that Trinidad "not only covers the southeastern approaches to the Caribbean, but presents extraordinarily favorable features either in the defense of the Carribbean, or as a base from which we may be attacked."

As for Newfoundland, Gen. Strong said that air and naval forces based here—whether American or enemy—could virtually prevent "all traffic from the northern part of North America to Europe."

Of the Congressmen who commented on the disclosure of negotiations, a majority called acquisition of additional bases desirable. Senator Holt (Democrat), West Virginia, while praising such a move, charged that it was "sugar coating" to make the transfer of destroyers palatable.

Several legislators, however, viewed the idea coldly, or with hostility, Representative Routzohn (Republican), Ohio, saying it would be "a stepping stone—like the Guard mobilization bill. He (Mr. Roosevelt) can involve us in war without a declaration of war."

Total Blockade Decree

Berlin, Aug. 17 (Via Radio).—The text of the German declaration announcing a "total blockade" of Britain:

Since the outbreak of war, England to an ever increasing extent, has violated international rules of war conduct. It began by proclaiming foodstuffs as contraband, which is in contrast to the most primitive laws of humanity. Just as in the World War, German women and children were to be hit thereby.

Then followed a declaration that all goods of German origin were contraband, including goods in neutral possession and which were exported from Germany in neutral ships.

Illegal arming of British merchantmen for the purpose of using these vessels as an aggressive weapon against German submarines was the next measure, followed by misuse of neutral flags et cetera.

Germany replied to this: Firstly, by shifting her trade to the east and, by considerably increasing her imports of foodstuffs and raw materials from European and Asiatic economic sectors, by securing for German economics enormous quantities of raw materials of all kinds in European countries freed from the enemy. Secondly, by sinking 5,000,000 gross register tons of merchant space by the German navy and airforce.

To this must be added 1,500,000 tons of cargo space which was rendered useless by heavy damages by air attacks. This makes, together, 6,500,000 tons.

English "Brutality"

Recognizing to an ever increasing extent the uselessness of her naval warfare, which conflict with all rules of international laws, England then took resort to methods which became more and more brutal.

Laying of drifting mines, open and camouflaged use of merchantmen for war actions, using of fishing vessels as submarine traps, (Prime Minister) Churchill's announcement in Parliament of May 9, 1940, that in Skagerrak all German merchant ships would be sunk at daytime and all vessels, without regard to nationality, at night time are all on the same line. The heaviest blow, however, was given by England to shipping of third states by the following measures:

England has, firstly, seized by force merchant ships of Norway, Denmark, Holland, Belgium and France in order to replace at least partly her own gigantic tonnage losses. Since then England compels owners and crews of these vessels to work for her. Secondly, England tries with all the means at her disposal to enforce her control on all neutral shipping.

Thus England of late blockaded by mines, illegally and completely, the region between Greenland and England and certain regions around southern England, forcing neutral shipping to enter British control harbors. England arbitrarily intercepts also vessels of nations like Japan, the Soviet Union and Sweden, which are not at all partaking in the European war. Moreover she now attempts at forcing upon neutral shipping the notorious "navicert system" (trade control by a certification system). She treats as prizes those ships without navicerts. By this means England tries to make serviceable for her own war aims all neutral merchant shipping.

No More Free Shipping

As regards the sea region around England, normal trade traffic is no longer going on there, as a result of ever-increasing fighting actions of the air and naval forces of the two belligerents. Sea routes and actions moreover are nowadays prescribed to neutral shipping by mines, outpost vessels, air patrols, British coastal batteries, etc. Other neutral vessels are mostly forced to run in convoys of British warships. Therefore there can be no talk any more today of free shipping. Developments, moreover, show that neutral shipping, as far as it today still is running on England, is subject to all dangers of warlike actions and that it, in view of all these things, is being misused directly or indirectly for doing service for England.

England herself has thus, by her measures, completely defying international law, made all waters around her isles a zone of military operations, a circumstance which would forbid any genuinely neutral ship from entering these waters.

A further deterrent for neutral ships and sailors should be the fact, that under the constantly growing pressure of the German armed forces England of late has been quite openly overstepping even the last boundaries of decent warfare.

Thus Mr. Churchill announced a few days ago that unarmed German salvage planes, protected by the sign of the Red Cross which were rescuing German and enemy airmen in distress at sea, would from now on be shot down by England.

This cynical incitement to murder which is symptomatic of the desperate mood at present of the British rulers in view of imminent defeat has been promptly followed by the British air force.

During recent air fights two German Red Cross planes trying to rescue wounded British airmen were shot down by the British.

Germany has watched these developments with careful attention for months in the hope that common sense might after all deter the present British rulers from continuing this criminal course of warfare. This hope was in vain, however. England rejected the Fuehrer's latest appeal.

The Reich government, therefore, has now decided to retaliate in kind and to employ armed forces with the same ruthlessness against shipping around England.

On September 26 the British government through Mr. Chamberlain, who then was premier, declared: Germany is a beleaguered fortress, and it is therefore quite legal and humane to cut off the German people from all vitally important supplies.

This means, in other words: The present British rulers regard it as a matter of course and as quite legal, if they had their will, to expose German women and children to a death of starvation, as in the World War.

The Fuehrer's policy which gave Germany economic access to food imports from large parts of the world, and the securing of large raw material reserves, thanks to a unique series of victories of our armies, frustrated the British plans, however. The present rulers of England know this. They nevertheless do not dare to admit complete failure for their policy to their own people, but are proclaiming war to the last.

In view of this self-destructive British attitude the Reich government establishes the fact that not Germany but the British Isles is the eleaguered fortress today.

Britain Blockaded

The unsuccessful attempt to starve German women and children through a hunger blockade is answered by Germany with the complete blockade of the British Isles here proclaimed.

Germany is convinced that, with the announcement of the total blockade of the British Isles, a further decisive step has been taken toward termination of the war and removal of the guilty people at present in power in Britain. The supreme command of the German armed forces will make the utmost use of the favorable strategic situation offered by German domination of the continental coasts from Biscay up to the North Cape.

Germany thus acts in the interests of the whole of Europe for, after it has been realized in London that starving out Germany is impossible, Britain tries to extend the hunger war to other European countries like Norway, Denmark, Holland, Belgium, France, Sweden, Spain and Portugal. Britain even tries to cut off from overseas supplies countries which have nothing whatever to do with the war like Japan, Soviet Russie, etc., under the pretext that Germany might possibly profit from such imports.

The rapid forcing of England to her knees and the removal of the people at present in power in London is consequently the foremost task for the sake of the whole of Europe and other neutral countries concerned. While some countries like the United States and Argentina long ago have declared the waters surrounding the British Isles a war zone and have forbidden their ships, airplanes and citizens to enter these dangerous zones, other countries have not yet taken the same step.

Germany, having repeatedly warned these states not to send their ships into the waters around the British Isles, has now again requested, in a note, these governments to forbid their ships from entering the Anglo-German war zones.

It is in the interest of these states themselves to accede to this German request as soon as possible.

The Reich government wishes to emphasize the following fact: The naval war in the waters around the British Isles is in full progress.

The whole area has been mined. German planes attack every vessel. Any neutral ship which in the future enters these waters is liable to be destroyed.

The Reich government in the future declines all responsibility without exception for damages suffered by ships or injuries to persons in these waters. By keeping their ships completely away from the British Isles neutrals on their part will help to avoid complications and end the war soon.

It will thus, moreover, be made more difficult for Mr. Churchill and other men like him to create in future any new so-called "Athenia" cases, in other words to let ships of a third state be sunk by British U-boats and then blame Germany for the sinking, in the hope of inciting public opinion in the third state concerned sufficiently to drive it into a war against Germany.

Germany is convinced that she does a service of historic importance, not only to Europe, but also to all neutral countries in the world, by finally removing the present system of British piracy.

Duce's Paper Hints Invasion Of Greece

Sees Mussolini Ready To Ask Athens for Policy on Albania

By the Associated Press

Rome, Aug. 17.—Premier Mussolini's newspaper, Il Ropolo D'Italal, indicated today Italy would ask the Greek government to define its position on Italian claims in behalf of Italian-annexed Albania within a few days.

"We have reason to believe the Rome government proposes to clarify the attitude of Greece completely within the next few days," said the newspaper, which gave a more ominous turn to the recent propaganda campaign being waged against pro-British Greece.

"It is necessary that everything be brought to light. It will thus be possible to judge if those responsible in Athens intend to recognize the rights of Albania and Italy or suffer the consequences of a policy of complicity."

Heretofore the Italians have accused Greece of being a vassal of Britain, of aiding in her Mediterranean war against Italy and of conniving in plots along the Albanian frontier.

Mussolini's newspaper, whose comment was typical of the entire press, strongly hinted at possible invasion, asking:

"Is it in the interest of the Greeks to repeat the experience of the Czecho-Slovaks, the Poles, Norwegians, Danes, Belgians and French?"

Balkan Tension Rises

Athens, Aug. 17 (U.P.).—Balkan tension rose today as rumors circulated in diplomatic quarters that Greece, Turkey and Russia are preparing to hold emergency general staff conferences.

The staff conferences were immediately linked in unofficial quarters to threat of an imminent Italian move against Greece—a threat brought vividly home to Greece by the torpedoing of a Greek cruiser and the bombing of two Greek destroyers by officially unidentified forces.

The opinion of Greek sailors aboard the destroyers—who were ordered not to talk about the affair—was that the planes that bombed them were Italian.

With the reports of general staff conferences it was learned that large numbers of Greek troops are being called to the colors, ostensibly for training purposes.

It was not known how many were affected by the order, but it was said that grand maneuvers which had been scheduled for September had been advanced to August.

The reports of the general staff conferences did not indicate where or when they would be held except that they are to be on an "emergency" basis, indicating they probably will begin almost immediately.

Turkey would be vitally affected by any move against Greece. She has an assistance pact with Greece and was pledged to go to war against Italy in event of hostilities in the eastern Mediterranean.

Russia, too, is intimately concerned in any development which would bring another large power closer to the vital Dardanelles.

[Diplomatic circles in Athens believe Greece is seeking Nazi intervention to keep the lid on Italian aspirations, the New York Times said. Reliable sources said Germany indicated willingness to undertake such a task in exchange for moral concessions to both the Axis powers. In the case of Italy alone this may include territorial demands. In the case of the two Allies together it will certainly include requests of economic and cultural favors.]

Mrs. Virnstein Dies; Widow Of Fire Hero

Funeral Services Tomorrow; Burial To Be at Cedar Hill

Funeral services for Mrs. A. Rose Virnstein, 58, widow of Battalion Chief John H. Virnstein, who was killed nine years ago in an Anacostia church fire, will be held at 11:30 a. m. tomorrow at Hines funeral home.

Mrs. Virnstein died Friday after an illness of one year at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Gertrude Towers, of 6326 Thirty-first street northwest. She had been treated by her son, Dr. J. E. Virnstein, of 6112 Utah avenue northwest.

Active in civic, fraternal and social work, Mrs. Virnstein was a past president of the District Fire Department Auxiliary. She pioneered in Parent-Teacher Association work in Washington and devoted many years to the development of Friendship House.

She was a past matron of the Brooklyn Chapter of the Order of the Eastern Star and a member of the American Federation of Women's Clubs, the Women's Political Study Club and the New York Avenue Presbyterian Church.

A native of Washington, she was educated in the District public schools.

Surviving are her son and daughter, three sisters, Mrs. Pearl Gibbs, of Washington Mrs. eo Morey, of Cranford, N. J., and Mrs. Harry Finfer, of Gouveneur, N. Y., and two brothers, Herman and David Altman, both of Washington.

Burial will be at Cedar Hill Cemetery.

War Includes Shell-Shock In Civilians

By the Associated Press

New York, Aug. 17.—Warfare such as that now raging in the skies over Britain, produces a "civilian shell shock" more insidious than the actual death and destruction poured upon the earth from bombing planes.

Such is the conclusion of British medical leaders, writing in recent issues of the Lancet, British Medical Association Journal, received at the New York Academy of Medicine.

Two British psychiatrists, a Harley street physician and a woman psychologist, agreed that the war of 1914-18 could not be compared with the present conflict, in its effect either upon civilian populations or upon active combatants.

Even before the present mass attacks upon England began, they noted such phenomena as:

Ghost-like figures walking the streets and screaming at the sight of German planes . . . Widespread mentally-induced palsy and insomnia . . . increasing apathy to the value of human life . . . diminishing reasoning power.

With the war so close at hand, the psychiatrists, William Sargent and Eliot Slater, wrote that more and more neurotic cases were developing and described the patients as having "thin, fallen-in faces with pallid or sallow complexions."

They also reported complaints of "terrifying bad dreams, feelings of inner unrest, hysterical fits and tendencies to be startled at the least noise, particularly at the sound of airplanes."

Actual physical effects of air raids were listed by Psychologist Mary Collins as:

Acceleration of the heart, rapid breathing, dryness of the mouth, shivering, quaking limbs and loss of voice.

In her article she said men and women who were utter strangers before the war were playing cards and staging knitting bees and community song-fests, just to be near one another in a moment of danger.

Dr. Clifford Allen wrote that while immorality had increased, so had religious sentiment. He said people were flocking to the churches.

Umpires Baffled, Try to Start War Games Over Again

Somewhere in Western Washington, Aug. 17 (AP).—Real war is bad enough, but heat and a utility company caused the Fourth Army's maneuvers to become so involved the umpires threatened to call the whole business off and start over again.

A bridge across the Nisqually River was to be destroyed (actually) by the retreating Northern "Red" Army, according to the blueprints of the war.

But, it developed, the bridge would be needed later by a utility for a construction job.

No one thought to tell the boys of the attacking 115th Cavalry, vanguard of the Southern "Blue" Army, so they went on across, scout cars and all.

Meantime, the practical 115th, tired of sweltering in the heat, did another obvious thing—they took off their heavy blue denim coats, distinguishing mark between them and the "Red" Army, and went through all opposition like a bride through her budget.

When the "Reds" and the umpires caught up with the invaders, the former wanted to try them as spies, but the umpires ruled the only penalty would be to withdraw and start over.

Then the officers of the 115th won their biggest victory of the day—they talked the umpires into letting them hold the ground gained if only the mechanized units recrossed the river legally.

Montgomery Bar Maps New Setup

Rockville, Aug. 17.—The Bar Association of Montgomery County is in process of reorganization. Twenty-five members met here and adopted a new constitution and by-laws and arranged for election of officers at a meeting next month. Under the new order, the group will meet monthly for luncheon and will hold a business session every three months beginning the third Wednesday of September. The officers to be chosen will include a president, vice president, secretary and treasurer and an executive board consisting of five members of which the president and secretary will be ex-officio members. William F. Prettyman is president and Leo Bender secretary of the association.

German Homes Are Searched In Tampico

Mexican Port Opens Sudden Campaign Against Fifth Column

By Jack O'Brine

Copyright by New York Tribune, Inc.

Mexico City, Aug. 17.—Authorities in Tampico, acting apparently without the knowledge of the Mexican Department of Interior, have begun a sudden drive against Fifth Columnists in the course of which the homes of many prominent Germans, including a vice consul, have been searched for incriminating documents and arms, it was learned tonight.

A telephone call to Tampico, one of Mexico's most important east coast ports, confirmed reports that the local police, accompanied by special agents of the attorney general's office, had entered not only the homes of Germans there but also the homes of Mexicans who are known to have done business with Germany.

One of the first homes searched last night was that of a Mexican, Antonio Lopez Cortina, president of the chamber of commerce and industry of Tampico and general manager of a maritime firm financed with German capital. Continuing the search the agents visited the home of Joseph R. Tipper, vice consul of Germany in Tampico. Nothing "of importance" was reported to have been found at either place.

Later, however, the Tampico authorities were said to have turned their attention to German seamen in port and confiscated from them private letters and other papers. No arrests were reported.

The German legation in Mexico City is expected to protest inasmuch as there was said to have been a violation of diplomatic immunity in the search of Tipper's home.

Spokesman of the interior department, which has jurisdiction over all police activity in Mexico, denied emphatically that orders had been given for the Tampico action, the first in weeks against Germans and others known to be carrying on a systematic campaign in favor of Nazi domination of the Americas.

The Washington Post
Is Now in Its 7th Consecutive Year
Of Leadership in School Advertising

EACH YEAR since 1934, and for the first seven months of 1940, local schools have placed more display advertising in The Post than in any other Washington newspaper. This continued selection of The Post as the No. 1 medium is conclusive proof that school advertising in The Post gets results.

And, because The Post carries the greatest volume of school advertising, Washingtonians have become accustomed to using The Post as their guide when selecting the right schools for themselves, or for their children.

When planning your Fall advertising, remember, you use a proved medium when you use The Washington Post.

U. S. Project Speeds New Sewer Setup

Divorcement of Storm, Sanitary Lines in 5 Areas to Be Completed

Divorcement of the city's combined storm and sanitary sewers with the aid of the Public Works Administration and Works Projects Administration will be completed before the end of this fiscal year, it was announced yesterday.

Paul Edwards, local WPA administrator, said a project recently approved will complete the required divorcement work in five major areas of the District. This will prevent pollution of the Potomac and Anacostia Rivers.

Not so long ago, all of Washington was served by combined system sewers. In an effort to provide a more adequate sewer system a study was made with the result the city was divided into two sections. The first section, almost entirely developed, was so densely populated any efforts to separate storm and sanitary sewers would cost an enormous sum and would require not only construction of new service and storm sewers but of large trunk lines as well.

This section is in the shape of a triangle with its base following the water front from Key Bridge on the Potomac to the Eleventh Street Bridge on the Anacostia, and the apex on Western avenue, a few blocks east of Chevy Chase Circle.

The second section, comprising the balance of the city or approximately 60 per cent of the total area, includes five small areas, Potomac Heights avenue, Macomb street area, Klingle Valley, Luzon Valley and Good Hope road area. Being in areas where there is still considerable land available for new constructions, these areas lent themselves to improvement by means of separate systems at a reasonable cost, Edwards said. One area received divorcement sewers with money provided by Congress for the District. PWA contracts have been let for paralleling sewers in other areas.

To prevent pollution from the so-called first section of the city, interceptors were built to divert sewage into mains which connect with the treatment plant at Blue Plains.

Fifth Battalion Leaves Today For Lakehurst

Marine Reserves Are Due to Return Here September 1

The Fifth Battalion, U. S. Marine Corps Reserve, will leave Union Station for Lakehurst, N. J., at 10 o'clock this morning for its annual field training.

Officers and men will assemble and leave for the station from headquarters at Sixth street and Indiana avenue northwest. They will return to Washington September 1.

Originally scheduled to take their training at Quantico, Va., the reserves were notified of the change in destination at the last moment because storm damage to the Marine base at Parris Island, S. C., compelled transfer of troops from there to Quantico.

Of the 440 members of the Fifth Battalion, 342 enlisted men and 18 officers are from Washington. Some will be attending their first four of field training, and some their thirteenth.

Lieut. Col. Harvey L. Miller, commanding, has been taking the local unit for its annual field training since 1929. He is a veteran of the World War, prior to which he served in Cuba, China, the Philippines, Nicaragua and Mexico.

Officers of the battalion are, in addition to Col. Miller:

Headquarters Company — Maj. William W. Stickney, Capt. William J. Burrows, First Lieut. Earl E. Holmes, First Lieut. Robert E. Copes, jr., Capt. Philip C. Ferguson, Capt. Benjamin M. Stern, Marine Gunner Myron E. Thompson, sr.

Medical officers, U. S. N. R.—Lieut. Comdr. Don S. Knowlton, Lieut. Comdr. Howard H. Strine, Lieut. William L. Schafer.

Company A—Capt. Otho L. Rogers, First Lieut. William F. Thyson, First Lieut. Charles L. Cogswell.

Company B—First Lieut. Alfred H. Marks, First Lieut. George M. Rice, Second Lieut. Robert W. Walker, jr.

Company C—Capt. Justice M. Chambers, First Lieut. Philip C. Holt, Second Lieut. Thomas B. Handley.

Company D—Capt. John E. Fondahl, Capt. Leon Brusiloff, First Lieut. Clifford A. Woodrum, Second Lieut. Charles W. Kelly, jr., Second Lieut. A. M. Parker.

Company D, Twenty-third Battalion (attached)—Capt. Charles B. Nerren, First Lieut. William R. Via, First Lieut. Neil G. Payne, Second Lieut. Charles I. Britts.

1st Congregational Series of Sermons End Tomorrow

Concluding his series on "In a Troubled World," the Rev. Walter G. Borchers, jr., assistant pastor of First Congregational Church, will preach at 11 a. m. today on "A Christian Looks Forward."

The Rev. Howard Stone Anderson, pastor, is preaching today at the First Presbyterian Church of San Francisco and Mrs. Anderson will conduct a Communion service for women at the biennial session of the General Council of Congregational and Christian Churches in Berkeley, Calif.

Dedication Is Set

Berkeley Springs, W. Va., Aug. 17.—A new addition to the United Brethren Church here will be dedicated September 22, the Rev. F. G. Senger, pastor, announced today.

Capital News In Brief

Youthful Thugs Batter Woman, 64

A 64-year-old woman was battered badly last night when she resisted two youthful purse snatchers who had failed in a similar attempt upon another woman a few minutes earlier.

Mrs. Margaret Rollman, 64, of 1309 Corbin place northeast, was taken to Casualty Hospital by a Ninth Precinct scout car and treated for injuries to her right side and the possible fracture of both elbows.

She told police that the boys accosted her at Thirteenth and F streets northeast and flung her to the ground when she held tightly to her purse. All three struggled upon the pavement until the youths, about 18 years old, were frightened off by her screams. Neighbors summoned police.

A few minutes before, the same youths attacked Ruth Loving, of 1302 East Capitol street at Thirteenth and Emerson streets northeast. Her screams frightened them off. She was bruised, but not injured seriously enough to require medical treatment.

Cheese and Lemon Pie Brings End to Day at Zoo

Cheese sandwiches and lemon pie, brought from Richmond, failed to agree with George E. Gray, 57, of Richmond, and his three young companions at the zoo yesterday.

They were stricken with food poisoning and taken to Children's Hospital, where Gray was given first aid and the youngsters were admitted for treatment.

Gray's stricken companions were his grandchildren, George S. Gray, jr., 11, and Frances Gray, 7, of Waldorf, Md., and his nephew, Harold Montgomery, 9, of Richmond.

Couple 'Lost' Room— And Belongings

H. H. McQueen and Mrs. McQueen, of St. Louis, Mo., would like to contact anyone who has information on the whereabouts of their baggage. So would the Third Police Precinct.

The couple arrived here Thursday, rented a room where they deposited their belongings, and left on a sight-seeing excursion. They have been unable to find the rooming house where they stopped. They appealed to police to help them locate the valuables.

Army Man Found Hanged at Hospital

A 25-year-old Army private, Joseph P. Little, of Philadelphia, Pa., was found hanging by his belt from the grillwork of a third-floor ward porch at St. Elizabeths Hospital last night.

Sent from his post in Philadelphia to Walter Reed Hospital last spring, Little was treated for a mental condition, then transferred to St. Elizabeths May 22. Physicians said he had been feeling depressed. Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald was investigating last night.

Emulating Famed Taffy, Men Lodged in Jail

Two young men were held by police last night in connection with periodic theft of about $2,000 worth of meat and cheese from the Southern Hotel Supply Co., 416 Morse street northeast, since May 1.

Arrested by Ninth Precinct detectives E. E. Thompson and Irving Lubore, the suspects, aged 20 and 24, admitted stealing about $500 worth of meat, part of which was recovered. Police said they believe the pair was selling the loot.

No charges had been placed against the men last night.

Police Seek Runaways Believed En Route to Fair

Two boys, 12 and 13, packed their knapsacks and set out for the New York World's Fair yesterday, their parents reported to police.

The youngsters, Billy Westmoreland, 12, of 3528 North Dakota avenue northeast, and Wesley Kulp, 13, of 2012 Monroe street northeast, were reported missing shortly before noon yesterday. Their parents told police that neighborhood playmates of the boys heard them say they were going to New York.

A broadcast was flashed to Maryland authorities but the boys had not been found late yesterday.

Columbia Cancels Bullitt Speech

The address of William C. Bullitt, Ambassador to France, which was to have been broadcast over Station WJSV of the Columbia Broadcasting System from 6 to 6:30 p. m. today has been canceled, it was announced last night.

The address will be heard, however, over Stations WMAL and WOL of the National and Mutual systems in the coast-to-coast hookup.

Paul Glenn, of the Columbia publicity staff, said the cancellation was due to a policy of the system to broadcast only exclusive material.

Four Stay Through Night On Grounded Yacht

A quartet of yachting enthusiasts whose 40-foot motor sailer ran aground off Shepard's Landing in the Potomac early today set themselves for a chilly vigil until high tide should tug their craft from a mudbank at 8 a. m. today.

The Harbor Police boat raced to the scene immediately after passers-by on shore had noticed the grounded ship and notified the precinct.

The two men and two women aboard the boat refused police offers to take them off, however, and said they would stand by their craft.

District Women's Bar Offers Scholarships

The Women's Bar Association of the District yesterday announced an offer of two 2-year scholarships and one 1-year scholarship in the School of Economics and Government in the junior college at National University.

Available to women who are high school graduates and who have had no prior college training, the scholarships begin at this fall term of school. Application blanks may be obtained from Mrs. Anna Moulton, chairman of the scholarship committee, 44 Fairview road, Silver Spring, Md.

10-Day Quarantine With Parrot Ended by Birdhouse Keeper

1. Suitcase in hand, Malcolm Davis jubilantly climbed over the padlocked gate to leave his quarters in the Zoo reptile house. His haste was . . .

2. . . . to join his wife, whom he gave a big kiss, after spending the last ten days in quarantine to learn whether the birds and beasts Dr. Mann brought back would infect anyone.

Hail and farewell!

"Hello," the parrot said, in its new erudition.

"Goodbye," Malcolm Davis, keeper of the Zoo's birdhouse cried, in his new freedom.

It was tough on the young African parrot's formal education, but nice for Davis, who 10 days ago quarantined himself with the birds and beasts Dr. William Mann brought back from Liberia for the Zoo. The veterinarians wanted to know if the birds and beasts would infect anyone.

The answer was in the agility of Davis' leap across the locked gate, barring way to the quarantine quarters. A suitcase and a big smile came across the hurdle with him.

Still, it was tough on the young parrot's formal education. A man with almost nothing to do for ten days can at least start a parrot toward the dictionary.

So the parrots were saying "Hello," "hello," to Davis when the word came that his expected 15-day quarantine would end with a parole beginning at 4 p. m. yesterday.

The parrots learned "Goodby" in way of practical demonstration.

But they will see Davis for the next five days, between 7:30 a. m. and 4 p. m. After that the quarantine is completely up.

Davis had slept on an army cot, when he could. He could when the six duikers (deer) and the four water deer weren't stomping on the floor, and when the two African gray parrots weren't saying "hello," and the 20 love birds weren't making love.

Davis loves animals and freedom from animals, too, of course.

Owers to Direct Utilities Unit In Red Cross Drive

Robert C. Owers, vice president and treasurer of the Washington Gas Light Co., yesterday was named chairman of the utilities roll call for the campaign of the District Chapter, American Red Cross.

OWERS

In announcing selection of Owers, Edgar Morris, general chairman, praised the "continued cooperation of Washington's utilities toward the success of the annual Red Cross membership drive.

Owers resides in Montgomery County, Md., and is president of the Bethesda-Chevy Chase Rotary Club.

Public Utility Status Is Urged For Parking

Three-fourths of the Capital's motorists would like to see parking facilities in downtown Washington declared a public utility, subject to Public Utility Commission regulation as to fees and services, the American Automobile Association announced yesterday.

A questionnaire is being circulated by the District A. A. A. in an effort to find out motorists' opinions on the city's parking problems. The District government has invited the organization to participate in an off-street parking study.

Most motorists favor 25 cents a day as a reasonable rate for "convenient" off-street parking, according to the A. A. A.

Terror Strikes in District 'Everglades'

STALKS CAPITAL—An alligator that terrorized three little girls was captured by police yesterday afternoon in a valiant piece of backyard action at 1314 Monroe street northwest. The 18-inch reptile slithered unexpectedly into the yard where Doris Bose, 7, of 1312 Monroe street, and three friends were at play. Their screams were heard by Miss Elizabeth Buckingham, who lives at 1314. She called police. Arriving in a jiffy, police surrounded the creature and captured it. They took it to the zoo, which the 'gator probably calls home.

'Chaos' Laid To Materialism In Education

Notre Dame Namur Alumnae Hear Talk By Msgr. Ready

Materialism in present-day education is largely to blame for the "existing world chaos," the Right Rev. Msgr. Michael J. Ready, general secretary of the National Catholic Welfare Conference, told the triennial convention of the International Federation of Notre Dame de Namur Alumnae at Trinity College here yesterday.

"It seems incredible," he told 250 delegates, "that for years men and women throughout the world were content to play 'blind man's buff' while the world's decencies and sanities were being destroyed by God-hating and church-persecuting intellectual and political leaders."

He declared "the present world cataclysm is now understood in the total rejection of, or apathetic indifference to a universal standard of morality."

Points Out Result

"University professors," he said, "taught their students to scoff at the medieval notion of moral obligation. The claims of the church to be the teacher and custodian of principles of morality were not considered worthy of examination in the schools and colleges.

"We witness today the inevitable result of the rejection of such a moral standard."

Yesterday afternoon the delegates made a trip to Tolchester, Md., the provincal motherhouse of the order, for tea followed by benediction.

The convention was opened by Sister Rosalia of the Blessed Sacrament, provincial superior of the Baltimore Province of the order, who traced the order's growth since its establishment here 100 years ago. She noted that the number of nuns, engaged in teaching, had increased from eight to 2,000.

Miss Mary Agnes Quinn, of Washington, second vice president, presided at the opening session.

Today's activities will include a pontifical mass at Trinity Chapel, celebrated by the Most Rev. John McNamara, auxiliary bishop of Washington and Baltimore. A breakfast will follow the mass, and a reception at Notre Dame Academy is scheduled for the afternoon.

Police Officer Called Up By Marines

Police Lieut. John E. Fondahl, 41, of the Traffic Division, a captain in the Marine Reserves, has been called to active service "for an indefinite period," The Post learned yesterday.

FONDAHL

Granted "leave without pay" from the Police Department by the Commissioners, Fondahl said he would report to Lakehurst, N. J., at the Naval Training Station this week. After two weeks there, he said, he will report to Quantico, Va.

A policeman for 17 years, Fondahl said he was uncertain over the time he will remain on active duty, but thought it would be for at least two years.

Fondahl is the first District policeman to be called for active duty, though more than 100 others are members of various service outfits. It is expected that Capt. Lloyd Kelley, commander of the Eighth Precinct, will be called. He is a major in the Marine Reserve.

Police officials said that Lieut. Fondahl's job is secure and he will be able to step into it on his return provided he passes the required physical examination. The lieutenant said, however, that if his outfit wants him to remain in the service, he probably will, resigning from the force.

Benjamin Levin Funeral Services To Be Held Today

Funeral services for Benjamin Levin, 46, active in American Legion affairs, will be held at 3 p. m. today at the Bernard Danzansky funeral home, 3501 Fourteenth street northwest, with burial in Baltimore.

Mr. Levin, a Postoffice Department clerk, died suddenly Friday in his apartment at 1519 Connecticut avenue northwest. Death was attributed to a heart ailment.

He was a member of Vincent B. Costello Post, No. 15, American Legion. Surviving are his mother, Mrs. Leah Levin, and a brother, Moses Levin.

John Poole, 65, Dies; Funeral Rites Tuesday

Civic and Financial Leader Started As Messenger Boy

Funeral services for John Poole, 65, the express company messenger who became a bank president and civic leader, will be at 11 a. m. Tuesday in St. Alban's Episcopal Church.

MR. POOLE

Mr. Poole, who was president of the American Co., real estate dealers, died yesterday at his Chevy Chase (Md.) home after an illness of three months. He was one of the founders and president of the Federal-American Bank from 1913 until its collapse during the bank holiday of 1933.

Active in business until the final illness that caused his death, Mr. Poole devoted most of his time in recent years to his work as a financial counselor and real estate dealer, after the bank failure that took his home and all his savings, leaving him bankrupt.

Born in Parkersburg, W. Va., the son of a grocer, Mr. Poole missed being a native Washingtonian by only one month. He was educated in the District public schools, Wood's Commercial College and the American Institute of Banking.

Starting in business as a messenger for the United States Express Co., he became a clerk, and finally cashier, before entering banking with the Washington Loan & Trust Co.

He was first campaign chairman of the Community Chest and he gained fame as a fund raiser by directing all five Liberty Loan campaigns in Washington during the World War.

From 1930 to 1932 he was a member of the Advisory Council to the Federal Reserve Board. In 1934 he was named executive director of the Washington Better Housing Program under the Federal Housing Administration.

His banking career was not limited to handling money. He invented and patented the "Clear-Vision" bank counter screen, which eliminated the traditional cage and was termed "the greatest contribution to banking architecture in 100 years."

Treasurer of the Y. M. C. A. for a quarter of a century, Mr. Poole also served as president of the Potomac Division of the Red Cross war fund campaign and treasurer of the Belgian Relief Association. He was a director of the American and Southeastern Univeresities and the Columbia Institute for the Deaf.

Devotee of Golf

An active sportsman, he was treasurer of the Columbia Country Club, where he was best known for his golf game and formidable horse-shoe pitching.

He was a director of the Chesapeake Potomac Telephone Co. for almost 25 years and the past president of innumerable organizations, including the District Bankers Association, the American Institute of Banking, the Fifth Federal Reserve District Stockholders Association, the Advertising Club of Washington, the Washington Rotary Club and the Rotary International.

He was treasurer of the Roosevelt Memorial Association and of the District Memorial Commission. A Mason, Mr. Poole was a past master of the Temple-Noyes Lodge and a member of Almas Temple of the Mystic Shrine and of the Scottish Rite.

Surviving are his second wife, Mrs. Frances Barber Poole; three sons, Nathan, Thomas and Jack Poole, and two daughters, Miss Marjorie Poole and Mrs. Virginia Hunt, all of Washington. There are also three brothers, Herbert and William Poole, of Washington, and C. L. Poole, of New York City, and two sisters, Mrs. Marguerite Talks and Mrs. Alice B. Prigg, both of Washington.

Buriel will be in Glenwood Cemetery.

Rites Set Today At Rockville For Miss Veirs

Funeral services for Miss Blanche Veirs, 71, for most of her life a resident of Montgomery County, will be held at 1:15 p. m. today at the W. Reuben Pumphrey funeral home, Rockville.

The Rev. J. Raymond Nelson, pastor of the Bethesda Baptist Church, will officiate, and burial will be in the Mount Zion Baptist Church Cemetery, near Alta Vista.

Miss Veirs died Friday in Washington. Her home was in Bethesda. A daughter of the late Samuel Clark Veirs and Mrs. Hester Veirs, she was born near Alta Vista.

Capt. John Smith Almost Dropped Decision to Fish

The Government's Fish and Wildlife Service yesterday bobbed up with one about Capt. John Smith that makes his tilt with Powhatan sound like a powder puff powwow.

Away back in 1608, before Pocahontas draped herself around his sun-bronzed neck to ward off a blow from a hard hickory club aimed by that virile Virginian, Powhatan, Capt. John went fishing.

Sniffing with contempt at the sissy system of hooks and lines, the doughty captain said, in effect, "Stand back, boys, I'll do it my way."

The scene was Chesapeake Bay.

Sighting what looked like a whopper swimming around the edge of his boat, Capt. John whipped out his trusty sword and touche—he stabbed a sting ray.

Now, back in the old world, the captain's rapier was an instrument of death and destruction, a thing to be mortally feared by man and beast, but for this denizen of the new world it apparently held no terrors.

Bitterly resentful, the sting ray turned on the captain and gave him some of his own medicine—with his (the sting ray's) sword, which is a sharp barbed spike attached to the tail.

Touche again!

Winged on his right wrist, Capt. John winced with pain, but bravely hoisted the hooked sting ray into the small fishing boat and ordered his boys to row for all they were worth for the big ship.

Writhing on his cabin bed, the captain fell to thinking about life and death and finally decided he was about through with the former and ready for the latter.

He ordered his grave prepared, says the Wildlife Service's historical expert, something he didn't do in his tilt with Powhatan.

But, in the nick of time his life was spared—not by a beautiful Indian princess, but by the remedial effect of some "precious ayle."

He got well and lived to eat his antagonist.

Falls, Traffic Accidents Hurt 6 in D. C. Area

Boy May Lose Leg; Another Suffers Fractured Pelvis

Two youths were injured seriously in falls from moving vehicles and four other persons were hurt in traffic mishaps in the Washington area yesterday.

James Barr, 17, of Orienta, Pa., fell from a freight train in Arlington after attempting to board a moving box car. His left leg was run over by a train wheel and may have to be amputated, physicians at Emergency Hospital said last night. He was rushed to the hospital by the Arlington Rescue Squad.

Fourteen-year-old John Lister, of Garrett Park, Kensington, Md., slipped from the running board of an automobile operated by a friend in Kensington. Taken to Emergency Hospital by the Kensington Rescue Squad, he was treated for a fractured pelvis and admitted.

A truck crashed into the rear end of a parked automobile at First and E streets northwest yesterday, injuring the auto's occupant, Mrs. Ruth Creason, 21, of Glenn Dale, Md. She was admitted to Providence Hospital and treated for shock and a possible left shoulder fracture. The truck, police said, was driven by James Hickman, of 411 New York avenue northwest.

George Floyd, 36, of Herndon, Va., was in Emergency Hospital last night suffering from arm cuts and a possible skull fracture. He was driving near his home, when his car ran off the road and overturned. A passing auto brought him to the hospital.

Roger Moser, 17, of 3605 Eastern avenue northeast, suffered lacerations of the scalp when a car in which he was riding collided head-on with an auto driven by Frank W. Wilson, 19, of 1772 E street northeast, at Fifth and Gallatin streets northwest, police reported. Moser was treated at Walter Reed Hospital.

Adam Janiszeski, 28, of 1717 Lincoln road northeast, received a fractured right arm when his motorcycle crashed with a car operated by Jack Segal, 37, of 1024 First street southeast at South Capitol and L streets.

Anglers to Try Catching Fish From a Blimp

Learning that fish have never been caught from a moving aircraft, as far as public records show, a group of Washington fishermen will attempt the feat tomorrow morning.

Led by Capt. Vernon Smith, one of the pilots of the Goodyear blimp Enterprise, the group will sail down the Potomac aboard the airship and throw lines overboard off St. Catherine's Island.

The hope is that, either by still fishing or trolling, at least one spot, croaker or trout may be taken, to create the first world's record.

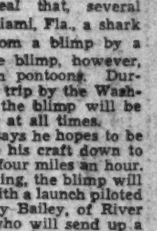
Records reveal that, several years ago in Miami, Fla., a shark was hooked from a blimp by a fisherman. The blimp, however, was floating on pontoons. During tomorrow's trip by the Washington anglers the blimp will be kept in the air at all times.

Capt. Smith says he hopes to be able to throttle his craft down to about three or four miles an hour. Besides the fishing, the blimp will make contact with a launch piloted by Capt. Finney Bailey, of River Springs, Md., who will send up a lunch by rope to the men in the air.

Sponsoring the stunt is St. Catherine's Island, Inc., nonprofit-making organization which is developing the historic 75-acre tract into a summer recreational area for women workers in the Federal Government. The blimp fishing party intends to prove there are fish around the island.

Cambridge Rector Hasn't Accepted Pulpit Here Yet

Dr. Leslie Glenn, rector of Christ Church, Cambridge, Mass., who has received a call to St. John's Episcopal Church, Lafayette Square, yesterday denied reports he had accepted the offer.



DR. GLENN

In a telephone conversation with The Post at his summer home in Dark Harbor, Me., Dr. Glenn said, "I have not yet made up my mind." He said he hoped to reach a decision shortly.

Dr. Glenn, 40-year-old rector of the church which does work among Harvard students, was asked to succeed Dr. Oliver J. Hart as rector of "The Church of the Presidents." Dr. Hart resigned to become pastor of Trinity Church in Boston.

Mrs. Anne Alpher, District Resident For 35 Years, Dies

Mrs. Anne Alpher, 41, philanthropist and resident of the District for 35 years, died yesterday at her home, 2636 Fifteenth street northwest.

Mrs. Alpher was the widow of David Alpher. She was former president of the Washington chapter and Seaboard region of Hadassah, women's Zionist organization, and a member of its national board.

Mrs. Alpher leaves a son, Bernard Alpher; her mother, Mrs. Fanny Dobkin; a sister, Miss Yetta Dobkin, all of Washington, and two brothers, Dr. Joseph J. Dobkin, of Toledo, Ohio, and William Dobkin, of Buffalo, N. Y.

Funeral services will be at 10 a. m. tomorrow at Danzansky's funeral home, 3501 Fourteenth street northwest. Burial will be in Adas Israel Cemetery.

McNary Favors Pension Plan Principles, Says Dr. Townsend

G. O. P. Vice Presidential Nominee Quoted As Saying He Would Go 'Whole Way' in Support of Downey Annuity Measure

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Aug. 16.—Dr. Francis E. Townsend tonight quoted Senator Charles L. McNary, of Oregon, Republican Vice Presidential candidate, as saying he would "go along the whole way in his support" of a Senate bill which incorporates the principles of the Townsend national recovery plan.

In the current issue of the National Townsend Weekly, official organ of the movement, Dr. Townsend said he visited Senator McNary in Washington recently and added:

"I told him we wanted a statement from him on our plan, and I outlined what we would consider a minimum statement.

"The Senator told me that he would go along the whole way in his support. He added that he would give his support to Senator Downey's (Democrat), of California, Senate bill No. 3255, rather than the House bill 8264, out of loyalty to his own legislative body. Of course, the bills are identical, so it didn't really make any difference which bill was indorsed."

The statement was followed by a copy of a letter the paper said Dr. Townsend had received from Senator McNary. The letter said in part:

"In my opinion Senate bill 3255 introduced in this session of Congress by Senator Downey, of California, is a sincere attempt to have the National Government insure all citizens a comfortable retirement annuity when the age of 60 is reached. I believe this Nation would prosper and human happiness be vastly increased if this were done. This measure should receive thoughtful and sympathetic consideration."

In Washington last night, Senator McNary refused to comment on Dr. Townsend's statement.

Bahaman Capital Gives Windsor Greatest Welcome Ever Accorded Island Governor

Associated Press WIREPHOTO

INDUCTION CEREMONY—The Duke of Windsor, taking office as Governor of the Bahama Islands, signs pledge of allegiance to his brother, King George. The Duchess and Chief Justice O. B. Daly, wearing his robe of office, looks on

By the Associated Press

Nassau, Bahamas, Aug. 17.—Amid the greatest welcome ever given a governor of the Bahama Islands, the Duke of Windsor pledged his efforts today to help the colony meet its war-time problems.

Thousands turned out in the tropical heat to cheer Edward and his American-born duchess as they stepped off the camouflaged vessel that brought them from Bermuda.

There was a tremendous ovation as the duke and duchess stepped out on a balcony of the legislative council chamber to acknowledge the acclaim of those who waited in the square outside while the new governor pledged his allegiance to the brother who succeeded him on the English throne.

Seated on a dais during the 50-minute ceremony, the duke frequently mopped his brow—his major general's uniform being unsuited for a steaming hot day.

The duchess—wearing a pink dress under a royal blue wool redingote and a tiny turban of pearly beads—appeared cooler than anyone else in the room as she calmly fanned herself.

Three addresses of welcome were delivered by high officials, then Edward made his brief reply in which he expressed the hope that his past experience would make his task as governor of 68,000 persons "not too formidable."

Before appearing on the balcony, the duke and duchess met ranking officials and their wives. The women followed the precedent set at Bermuda and curtsied to Edward, bowed to his wife.

New Zealanders Cheer Parading Troops

Copyright by New York Times

Wellington, New Zealand, Aug. 17. Today New Zealand saw on the march another great body of troops mobilized since the war began.

For the first time all men paraded in British battle dress and the familiar New Zealand peaked, flat-brimmed service hat was absent. The men, mostly of huge physique, marched confidently through crowds that blocked traffic along the line of march for hours.

Shiloh Baptists To Meet Aug. 27

Special Dispatch to The Post

Culpeper, Va., Aug. 17.—Plans have been announced for the 146th annual session of the Shiloh Baptist Association, comprising 40 churches in the counties of Culpeper, Madison, Green and Albemarle, to be held on August 27-28 in the Brandy Baptist Church, Culpeper County.

The topic will be "Building on the Cooperative Program Dollar" and the principal sermon will be delivered by the Rev. Edwin D. Coleman, of Madison County, who is serving as pastor of the host church. Addresses will be made by Dr. J. J. Wicker, president of Fork Union Military Academy; Dr. George W. Sadler, the Rev. Reuben Alley and Dr. Solon H. Cousins, of Richmond.

Mrs. Mack Marshall, of Advance Mills, who heads the Women's Missionary Union, will conduct services for her department.

'Man's World' No Longer as 195 D. C. Girls Move Into Boys Club Camp Site for 2 Weeks

TOMBOYS FOR AWHILE—Boys, look out! And all of the Police Boys had better have been gone when these lassies arrived at the Scotland, Md., camp, for it appears that they will not tolerate any interference with their sports for the next two weeks

Camp Ernest W. Brown, Metropolitan Police Boys' Club vacation spot, yesterday was taken over by 165 Washington girls, six senior and 24 junior councilors, who supplanted boy campers to commence a two week's visit.

Heading the invasion was Miss Sibyl Baker, director of community centers and playgrounds, and chairman of a committee which selected the girls, 13 to 15, from various Capital social agencies.

The girls are taking up where 200 boys who returned yesterday from th camp left off. Their visit marks the first time campers from the distaff side have been admitted to the resort. It is the result of an idea by Camp Founder Ernest W. Brown which also was sponsored by Commissioner John Russell Young.

The 195 campers sped to the camp in six buses after a send-off from Morris Cafritz, president of the Boys' Club, expressed the hope that the camp facilities would be available for the girls every summr.

Camp director will be Natalie Wanzilak, of Yonkers, N. Y. Etta Mae Russell, Juvenil Court worker for the Council of Church Women, and Mrs. Vivian Schaefer, recreational director of the Community Center playgrounds, will assist Miss Wanzilak.

Complete Text of Willkie Acceptance Speech at Elwood, Indiana

Calls on All Races, Creeds, Political Faiths to Join 'Crusade' to Preserve American Democracy; Approves Curb on Concentrated Power

Elwood, Ind., Aug. 17 (AP).—Here is the text of the speech in which Wendell L. Willkie formally accepted the Republican Presidential nomination here today:

The ceremony of an acceptance speech is a tradition of our pioneer past—before the days of rapid communication. You all know that I accepted at Philadelphia the nomination of the Republican Party for President of the United States. But I take pride in the traditions and not in change for the mere sake of overthrowing precedents.

An acceptance speech is a candidate's keynote, a declaration of his broad principles. It cannot possibly review the issues in detail. I shall, however, cover each of them frankly during this campaign. Here I give you an outline of the political philosophy that is in my heart. We are here today to represent a sacred cause—the preservation of American democracy.

Obviously, I cannot lead this cause alone. I need the help of every American — Republican, Democrat or Independent—Jew, Catholic, or Protestant—people of every color, creed and race. Party lines are down. Nothing could make that clearer than the nomination by the Republicans of a liberal Democrat who changed his party affiliation because he found democracy in the Republican Party and not in the New Deal Party.

And as the leader of the Republican Party let me say this: We go into our campaign as into a crusade. Revitalized and reunited, and joined by millions who share in our cause, we dedicate ourselves to the principles of American liberty, and we shall fight this campaign on the basis of those principles, not on the basis of hate, jealousy, or personalities. The leaders of the Republican Party, in Congress and in the party organization have made me that pledge. I have given that pledge to them. And I extend it to all who will join in this cause. What we need in this country is a new leadership that believes in the destiny of America. I represent here today the forces that will bring that leadership to you.

There is a special reason why I have come back to Elwood, Ind., to make this acceptance speech. I have an engagement to keep in this town. It was made a long time ago with a young man I knew well.

Sketches Early Ideals

This young man was born and raised in Elwood. He attended the Elwood public schools. He worked in your factories and stores. He started the practice of law in your courts. As I look back upon him, I realize that he had plenty of faults. But he had also three steadfast convictions. He was devoted to the ideal of individual liberty. He hated all special privileges and forms of oppression. And he knew without any doubt that the greatest country on earth was the United States of America.

That boy was myself 30 or 35 years ago. I still adhere to those convictions. To him, to his generation, to his elders, and to the youth of today I pledge my word that I shall never let them down.

In former days America was described as a country in which any young man might become President. It is still that kind of country. The thousands of my fellow townsmen standing hereabout know how distant seemed that opportunity to me 30 years ago. We must fight to preserve America as a country in which every girl and boy has every opportunity for any achievement.

To the millions of our young men and women who have been deliberately disillusioned by the political influences I now oppose; to the millions who no longer believe in the future of their land—to them I want to say in all humility—this boy I knew started like you, without money or position; but America gave him the opportunity for a career. I want to assure a similar opportunity to every boy and girl of today who is willing to stand on his own feet, and work and fight.

I have more reason than most of you to feel strongly about this because the United States gave to my family their first chance for a free life. The ancestors of both my father and my mother, like the ancestors of millions of Americans, lived in central Europe. They were humble people—not members of the ruling or wealthy classes. Their opportunities were restricted by disciminatory laws and class distinctions. One was exiled because of his religion; another was persecuted because the French revolution and still he believed in the principles of another was jailed for insisting on the right of free speech.

As their descendent, I have fought from boyhood against all those restrictions, discriminations and tyrannies. And I am still fighting.

Pledges Tolerance, Freedom

My grandparents lived in Germany. They were supporters of the democratic revolutions in that country, and when the revolutions failed they fled to the United States. How familiar that sounds! Today, also, people are being oppressed in Europe. The story of the barbarous and worse than medieval persecution of the Jews—a race that has done so much to improve the culture of these countries and our own—is the most tragic in human history. Today there are millions of refugees who desire sanctuary and opportunity in America, just as in my grandparents' time. The protection of our own labor and agriculture prevents us from admitting more than a few of them. But their misery and suffering make us resolve to preserve our country as a land free of hate and bitterness, of racial and class distinction. I pledge you that kind of America.

My mother was born in this country. My father was 3 or 4 years old when his parents settled in northern Indiana. It was then a trackless forest. As a young man he helped to clear that forest. He worked his way through the Fort Wayne Methodist College, taught school, and became superintendent of schools here in Elwood. My mother was also a school teacher. Whenever they had time, they both studied law and eventually both took up the practice of law. I doubt if any two people ever appreciated or loved this country more than they.

As you who live here with them well know, they were fiercely democratic. They hated oppression, autocracy or arbitrary control of any kind. They believed in the qualities that have made America great—an independent spirit, an inquiring mind, a courageous heart. At school they taught those virtues to many of you who are here today. At home they taught them to their children. It is a tribute to their teaching that when the United States entered the World War in 1917, three of their four boys were volunteers, in the uniform of the American forces, within one month after war was declared. They withheld no sacrifices for the preservation of the America of 1917. In an even more dangerous world, we must not withhold any sacrifice necessary for the preservation of the America of 1940.

United States Not Isolated

Today we meet in a typical American town. The quiet streets, the pleasant fields that lie outside, the people going casually about their business, seem far removed from the shattered cities, the gutted buildings, and the stricken people of Europe. It is hard for us to realize that the war in Europe can affect our daily lives. Instinctively we turn aside from the recurring conflicts over there, the diplomatic intrigue, the shifts of power that the last war failed to end.

Yet—instinctively a l s o—we know that we are not isolated from those suffering people. We live in the same world as they, and we are created in the same image. In all the democracies that have recently fallen, the people were living the same peaceful lives that we live. They had similar ideals of human freedom. Their methods of trade and exchange were similar to ours. Try as we will, we cannot brush the pitiless picture of their destruction from our vision, or escape the profound effects of it upon the world in which we live.

No man is so wise as to foresee what the future holds or to lay out a plan for it. No man can guarantee to maintain peace. Peace is not something that a nation can achieve by itself. It also depends on what some other country does. It is neither practical, nor desirable, to adopt a foreign program committing the United States to future action under unknown circumstances.

The best that we can do is to decide what principle shall guide us.

For me, that principle can be simply defined:

In the foreign policy of the United States, as in its domestic policy, I would do everything to defend American democracy and I would refrain from doing anything that would injure it.

We must not permit our emotions—our sympathies or hatreds—to move us from that fixed principle.

For instance, we must not shirk the necessity of preparing our sons to take care of themselves in case the defense of America leads to war. I shall not undertake to analyze the legislation on this subject that is now before Congress, or to examine the intentions of the Administration with regard to it. I concur with many members of my party, that these intentions must be closely watched. Nevertheless, in spite of these considerations, I cannot ask the American people to put their faith in me without recording my conviction that some form of selective service is the only democratic way in which to secure the trained and competent man power we need for national defense.

Also, in the light of my principle, we must honestly face our relationship with Great Britain. We must admit that the loss of the British fleet would greatly weaken our defense. This is because the British fleet has for years controlled the Atlantic, leaving us free to concentrate in the Pacific.

If the British fleet were lost or captured, the Atlantic might be dominated by Germany, a power hostile to our way of life, controlling in that event most of the ships and shipbuilding facilities of Europe.

This would be calamity for us. We might be exposed to attack on the Atlantic. Our defense would be weakened until we could build a Navy and air force strong enough to defend both coasts. Also, our foreign trade would be profoundly affected. That trade is vital to our prosperity. But if we had to trade with a Europe dominated by the present German trade policies, we might have to change our methods to some totalitarian form. This is a prospect that any lover of democracy must view with consternation.

The objective of America is in the opposite direction. We must, in the long run, rebuild a world in which we can live and move and do business in the democratic way.

The President of the United States recently said: "We will extend to the opponents of force the material resources of this Nation, and at the same time we will harness the use of those resources in order that we ourselves, in the Americas, may have equipment and training equal to the task of any emergency and every defense."

I should like to state that I am in agreement with these two principles, as I understand them—and I don't understand them as implying military involvement in the present hostilities. As an American citizen I am glad to pledge my wholehearted support to the President in whatever action he may take in accordance with these principles.

Says Roosevelt "Inflammatory"

But I cannot follow the President in his conduct of foreign affairs in this critical time. There have been occasions when many of us have wondered if he is deliberately inciting us to war. I trust that I have made it plain that in the defense of America, and of our liberties, I should not hesitate to stand for war. But like a great many other Americans I saw what war was like at first hand in 1917. I know what war can do to demoralize civil liberties at home. And I believe it to be the first duty of a President to try to maintain peace.

But Mr. Roosevelt has not done this. He has dabbled in inflammatory statements and manufactured panics. Of course, we in America like to speak our minds freely, but this does not mean that at a critical period in history our President should cause bitterness and confusion for the sake of a little political oratory. The President's attacks on foreign powers have been useless and dangerous. He has courted a war for which the country is hopelessly unprepared—and which it emphatically does not want. He has secretly meddled in the affairs of Europe, and he has even unscrupulously encouraged other countries to hope for more help than we are able to give.

"Walk softly and carry a big stick" was the motto of Theodore Roosevelt. It is still good American doctrine for 1940. Under the present Administration the country has been placed in the false position of shouting insults and not even beginning to prepare to take the consequences.

But while he has thus been quick to tell other nations what they ought to do, Mr. Roosevelt has been slow to take the American people into his confidence. He has hesitated to report facts, to explain situations, or to define realistic objectives. The confusion in the Nation's mind has been largely due to this lack of information from the White House.

As President, I plan to reverse both of these policies. I should threaten foreign governments only when our country was threatened by them and when I was ready to act, and I should consider our diplomacy as part of the people's business concerning which they were entitled to prompt and frank reports to the limit of practicability.

Candor Democracy's Hope

Candor in these times is the hope of democracy. We must not kid ourselves any longer. We must begin to tell ourselves the truth—right here—and right now.

We have been sitting as spectators of a great tragedy. The action on the stage of history has been relentless.

For instance, the French people were just as brave and intelligent as the Germans. Their armies were considered the best in the world. France and her allies won the last war. They possessed all the material resources they needed. They had wealth and reserves of credit all over the earth. Yet the Germans crushed France like an eggshell.

The reason is now clear: The fault lay with France herself.

France believed in the forms of democracy and in the idea of freedom. But she failed to put them to use. She forgot that freedom must be dynamic, that it is forever in the process of creating a new world. This was the lesson that we of America had taught to all countries.

When the European democracies lost that vision, they opened the way to Hitler. While Germany was building a great new productive plant, France became absorbed in unfruitful political adventures and flimsy economy theories. Her government was trying desperately to cover the people's nakedness with a garment that was not big enough.

The free men of France should have been weaving themselves a bigger garment. For in trying to pull the small one around themselves they tore it to pieces.

And in this tragedy let us find our lesson. The foreign policy of the United States begins right here in our own land. The first task of our country in its international affairs is to become strong at home. We must regain prosperity, restore the independence of our people, and protect our defensive forces. If that is not done promptly we are in constant danger. If that is done no enemy on earth dare attack us. I propose to do it.

Sees U. S.-Nazi Clash

We must face a brutal, perhaps a terrible fact. Our way of life is in competition with Hitler's way of life.

This competition is not merely one of armaments. It is a competition of energy against energy, production against production, brains against brains, salesmanship against salesmanship.

In facing it we should have no fear. History shows that our way of life is the strong way. From it has come more wealth, more industry, more happiness, more human enlightenment, than from any other way. Free men are the strongest men.

But we cannot just take this historical fact for granted. We must make it live. If we are to outdistance the t o t a l i t a r i a n powers, we must arise to a new life of adventure and discovery. We must make a wider horizon for the human race. It is to that new life that I pledge myself.

I promise, by returning to those same American principles that overcame German autocracy once before, both in business and in war, to outdistance Hitler in any contest he chooses in 1940 or after. And I promise that when we beat him, we shall beat him on our own terms, in our own American way.

The promises of the present Administration cannot lead you to victory against Hitler, or against anyone else. This Administration stands for principles exactly opposite to mine. It does not preach the doctrine of growth. It preaches the doctrine of division. We are not asked to make more for ourselves. We are asked to divide among ourselves that which we already have. The New Deal doctrine does not seek risk, it seeks safety. Let us call it the "I pass" doctrine. The New Deal dealt it, and refused to make any more bets on the American future.

New Deal Attacked

Why that is exactly the course France followed to her destruction! Like the Blum government in France, so has our Government become entangled in unfruitful adventures. As in France, so here, we have heard talk of class distinctions and of economic groups preying upon other groups. We are told that capital hates labor and labor capital. We are told that the different kinds of men whose task it is to build America are enemies of one another. And I am ashamed to say that some Americans have made political capital of that supposed enmity.

As for me, I want to say here and now that there is no hate in my heart, and that there will be none in my campaign. It is my belief that there is no hate in the hearts of any group of Americans for any other American group—except as the New Dealers seek to put it there for political purposes. I stand for a new companionship in an industrial society.

Of course, if you start like the New Deal with the idea that we shall never have many more automobiles or radios, that we cannot develop many new inventions of importance, that our standard of living must remain what it is, the rest of the argument is easy. Since a few people have more than they need and millions have less than they need, it is necessary to redivide the wealth and turn it back from the few to the many.

But this can only make the poor poorer and the rich less rich. It does not really distribute wealth. It distributes poverty.

Asserts Liberalism

Because I am a businessman, formerly connected with a large company, the doctrinaires of the opposition have attacked me as an opponent of liberalism. But I was a liberal before many of these men had heard the word, and I fought for many of the reforms of the elder La Follette, Theodore Roosevelt, and Woodrow Wilson before another Roosevelt adopted—and distorted—liberalism.

I learned my liberalism right here at home. From the factories that came into this town many years ago, large fortunes were made by a few individuals, who thereby acquired too much power over our community. Those same forces were at work throughout the rest of the Nation. By 1929 the concentration of private power had gone further than it should ever go in a democracy.

We all know that such concentration of power must be checked. Thomas Jefferson disliked regulation, yet he said that the prime purpose of government in a democracy is to keep men from injuring each other. We know from our own experience that the less fortunate or less skillful among us must be protected from encroachment. That is why we support what is known as the liberal point of view. That is why we believe in reform.

Opposes Monopolies

I believe that the forces of free enterprise must be regulated. I am opposed to business monopolies. I believe in collective bargaining by representatives of labor's own free choice, without any interference and in full protection of those obvious rights. I believe in the maintenance of minimum standard for wages and of maximum standards for hours. I believe that such standards should constantly improve. I believe in the Federal regulation of interstate utilities, of securities markets, and of banking. I believe in Federal pensions, in adequate old-age benefits and in unemployment allowances.

I believe that the Federal Government has a responsibility to equalize the lot of the farmer, with that of the manufacturer. If this cannot be done by parity of prices, other means must be found—with the least possible regimentation of the farmer's affairs. I believe in the encouragement of cooperative buying and selling and in the full extension of rural electrification.

The purpose of all such measures is indeed to obtain a better distribution of the wealth and earning power of this country. But I do not base my claim to liberalism solely on my faith in such reforms. American liberalism does not consist merely in reforming things. It consists also in making things.

The ability to grow, the ability to make things, is the measure of man's welfare on this earth. To be free, man must be creative.

I am a liberal because I believe that in our industrial age there is no limit to the productive capacity of any man. And so I believe that there is no limit to the horizon of the United States.

I say that we must substitute for the philosophy of distributed scarcity the philosophy of unlimited productivity. I stand for the restoration of full production and reemployment by private enterprise in America.

And I say that we must henceforth ask certain questions of every reform and of every law to regulate business or industry. We must ask: Has it encouraged our industries to produce? Has it created new opportunities for our youth? Will it increase our standard of living? Will it encourage us to open up a new and bigger world?

A reform that cannot meet these tests is not a truly liberal reform. It is an "I pass" reform. It does not tend to strengthen our system, but to weaken it. It exposes us to aggressors, whether economic or military. It encourages class distinctions and hatreds. And it will lead us inevitably, as I believe we are now headed, toward a form of government alien to ours, and a way of life contrary to the way that our parents taught us here in Elwood.

Only Strong Are Free

It is from weakness that people reach for dictators and concentrated Government power. Only the strong can be free.

And only the productive can be strong.

When the present Administration came to power in 1933, we heard a lot about the forgotten man. The Government, we were told, must care for those who had no other means of support. With this proposition all of us agreed. And we still hold firmly to the principle that those whom private industry cannot support must be supported by Government agency, whether Federal or State.

But I want to ask anyone in this audience who is, or has been, on relief whether the support that the Government gives him is enough. Is it enough for the free able-bodied American to be given a few scraps of cash or credit with which to keep himself and his children just this side of starvation and nakedness? Is that what the forgotten man wanted us to remember?

What that man wanted us to remember was his chance—his right—to take part in our great American adventure.

But this Administration never remembered that. It launched a vitriolic and well-planned attack against those very industries in which the forgotten man wanted a chance.

It carried on a propaganda campaign to convince the people that businessmen are iniquitous.

New Deal Injured Industry

It seized upon taxing power for political purposes. It has levied taxes to punish one man, to force another to do what he did not want to do, to take a crack at a third whom some Government agency disliked, or to promote the experiments of a brain trust. The direct effect of the New Deal taxes has been to inhibit opportunity. It has diverted the money of the rich from productive enterprises to Government bonds, so that the United States Treasury—and no one else—may have plenty to spend. Thus much of the money of the rich is invested in tax-exempt securities.

Ability to Pay

In this connection let me say that, in its plan for tax revision the Republican Party will follow two simple principles. Taxes shall be levied in accordance with each one's ability to pay. And the primary purpose of levying them will be to raise money. We must—and can—raise more money at less relative cost to the people. We must do it without inflicting on the poor the present disproportionate load of hidden taxes.

The New Deal's attack on business has had inevitable results. The investor has been afraid to invest his capital, and therefore billions of dollars now lie idle in the banks. The businessman has been afraid to expand his operations, and therefore millions of men have been turned away from the employment offices. Low incomes in the cities and irresponsible experiments in the country have deprived the farmer of his markets.

For the first time in our history, American industry has remained stationary for a decade. It offers no more jobs today than it did ten years ago—and there are 6,000,000 more persons seeking jobs. As a Nation of producers we have become stagnant. Much of our industrial machinery is obsolete. And the national standard of living has declined.

"New Deal Has Failed"

It is a statement of fact, and no longer a political accusation, that the New Deal has failed in its program of economic rehabilitation. And the victims of its failures are the very persons whose cause it professes to champion.

The little businessmen are victims because their chances are more restricted than ever before.

The farmers are victims because many of them are forced to subsist on what is virtually a dole, under centralized direction from Washington.

The 9,000,000 or 10,000,000 unemployed are victims because their chances for jobs are fewer.

6,000,000 Families on Relief

Approximately 6,000,000 families are victims because they are on relief.

And unless we do something about it soon, 130,000,000 people—an entire Nation—will become victims, because they stand in need of a defense system which this Administration has so far proved itself powerless to create anywhere except on paper.

To accomplish these results, the present Administration has spent $60,000,000,000.

And I say there must be something wrong with a theory of Government or a theory of economics by which, after the expenditure of such a fantastic sum, we have less opportunity than we had before.

"Where is the Recovery?"

The New Deal believes, as frequently declared, that the spending of vast sums by the Government is a virtue in itself. They tell us that Government spending insures recovery. Where is the recovery?

The New Deal stands for doing what has to be done by spending as much money as possible. I propose to do it by spending as little money as possible. This is one great issue in domestic policy and I propose in this campaign to make it clear.

And I make this grave charge against this Administration:

I charge that the course this Administration is following will lead us, like France, to the end of the road. I say that this course will lead us to economic disintegration and dictatorship.

Philosophy of Production

I say that we must substitute for the philosophy of spending the philosophy of production. You cannot buy freedom. You must make freedom.

This is a serious charge. It is not made lightly and it cannot be lightly avoided by the opposition. I, therefore, have a proposal to make.

The President stated in his acceptance speech that he does not have either "the time or the inclination to engage in purely political debate." I do not want to engage in purely political debate, either. But I believe that the tradition of face-to-face debate is justly honored among our American political traditions. I believe that we should set an example, at this time, of the workings of American democracy. And I do not think that the issues at stake are "purely political." In my opinion they concern the life and death of democracy.

Joint Appearances

I propose that during the next two and a half months the President and I appear together on public platforms in various parts of the country to debate the fundamental issues of this campaign. These are the problems of our great domestic economy, as well as of our national defense—the problem of agriculture, of labor, of industry, of finance, of the Government's relationship to the people, and of our preparations to guard against assault. And also I would like to debate the question of the assumption by this President, in seeking a third term, of a greater public confidence than was accorded to our Presidential giants—Washington, Jefferson, Jackson, Lincoln, Cleveland, Theodore Roosevelt, and Woodrow Wilson.

I make this proposal respectfully to a man upon whose shoulders rest the cares of the state. But I make it in dead earnest.

I accept the nomination of the Republican Party for President of the United States.

Spirit of Dedication

I accept it in the spirit in which I know it was given at our convention in Philadelphia—the spirit of dedication. I herewith dedicate myself with all my heart, with all my mind and with all my soul to making this Nation strong.

But I say this, too: In the pursuit of that goal I shall not lead you down the easy road. If I am chosen the leader of this democracy as I am now of the Republican Party, I shall lead you down the road of sacrifice and of service to your country.

What I am saying is a far harsher thing than I should like to say in this speech of acceptance—a far harsher thing than I would have said had the Old World not been swept by war during the past year. I am saying to you that we cannot rebuild our American democracy without hardship, without sacrifice, even without suffering. I am proposing that course to you as a candidate for election by you.

"Toil and Sweat" Ahead

When Winston Churchill became Prime Minister of England a few months ago, he made no sugar-coated promises. "I have nothing to offer you," he said; "but blood, toil, tears and sweat." Those are harsh words, brave words; yet if England lives, it will be because her people were told the truth and accepted it. Fortunately, in America, we are not reduced to "blood and tears." But we shall not be able to avoid the "toil and sweat."

In these months ahead of us, every man who works in this country—whether he works with his hands or with his mind—will have to work a little harder. Every man and woman will feel the burden of taxes. Every housewife will have to plan a little more carefully. I speak plainly because you must not be deceived about the difficulties of the future. You will have to be hard of muscle, clear of head, brave of heart.

Today great institutions of freedom, for which humanity has spilled so much blood, lie in ruins. In Europe those rights of person and property—the civil liberties—which your ancestors fought for and which you still enjoy, are virtually extinct. And it is my profound conviction that even here in this country, the Democratic Party, under its present leadership, will prove incapable of protecting those liberties of yours.

Calls for Unity

The Democratic Party today stands for division among our people; for the struggle of class against class and faction against faction; for the power of political machines and the exploitation of pressure groups. Liberty does not thrive in such soil.

The only soil in which liberty can grow is that of a united people. We must have faith that the welfare of one is the welfare of all. We must know that the truth can only be reached by the expression of our free opinions, without fear and without rancor. We must acknowledge that all are equal before God and before the law. And we must learn to abhor those disruptive pressures, whether religious, political or economic, that the enemies of liberty employ.

The Republican Party and those associated with it constitute a great political body that stands preeminently for liberty—without commitments, without fear and without contradictions. This party believes that your happiness must be achieved through liberty rather than in spite of liberty. We ask you to turn your eyes upon the future, where your hope lies. We see written there the same promise that has always been written there—the promise that strong men will perform strong deeds.

With the help of Almighty Providence, with unyielding determination and ceaseless effort we must and we shall make this American promise come true.

Text of Martin's Address Notifying Willkie of Nomination

Calls Nominee Hope Of a Majority of American People

The address by National Chairman Joseph W. Martin, notifying Wendell Willkie of his nomination for the Presidency follows:

Mr. Willkie:

We are here to carry out an old American custom—to notify you officially that you were chosen by the Republican Party in its National Convention at Philadelphia on June 28 as its candidate for the Presidency of the United States. I hope it will not come as too great a surprise.

This custom originated in the time when men had to travel long distances on horseback actually to carry the first tidings of a nomination to the candidate. It may seem to some in these headlong days that custom of this kind is outmoded, but others believe it is well for the Nation to continue to cling to some of its traditions.

As chairman of the committee of notification, it is my honor and pleasure to bring you the enthusiastic greetings of the great Republican Party.

Your nomination at Philadelphia did not come from any scheming clique of political bosses. It did not come from any group of conspirators anxious to retain their control of the Government for selfish purposes. Your nomination was the result of a Nation-wide demand of a great people anxious about their own future and that of their Government.

They had seen this country drifting toward bankruptcy, inflation, and perhaps war. They had seen experiment after experiment fail. All called for huge appropriations, but none brought the security or the happiness which were promised.

People Seek a New Leader

Ten millions of men and women begged for a chance to earn their livelihood in the American way. Millions of young men and young women pleaded for a chance for a regular job, for the opportunities which their fathers and their mothers had been blessed with. Year after year passed without those opportunities being presented. Little hope for the future was held forth: indeed, those who presumed to speak for the Administration frankly stated that unemployment and distress had come to stay.

This philosophy of despair and defeat was not welcomed by the American people. It was not the spirit of the real American tamely to accept defeat. The people turned to seek a new leader—one with capacity to do big things; one who knew the many interests involved and the different problems confronting the Nation at home and abroad, one who could rise above narrow partisanship and petty prejudices and who could put the welfare of this country first.

They saw in you such a man. Born in humble circumstances, you have risen through your own efforts to a commanding position because of your ability to do things well; you have proved yourself an able man, a sincere man; one who is broad and liberal enough to give every man and every woman sheltered under the American flag equal justice and equal opportunity.

Thus you have been selected to save America and lead our country back along the road to recovery and better days. Out of the hearts of these patriotic Americans came the chant, "We want Willkie." Louder and louder came the call. An unbossed convention listened. A deliberative group of delegates acted. You became the nominee of a convention which selected you in the traditional American way.

REPRESENTATIVE MARTIN

Fundamental Issues at Stake

No one can say you do not represent a free choice by the people.

This campaign of 1940 is vastly more significant and important than an ordinary election contest between two political parties. It is a contest between the forces of constitutional government and liberty and those influences which are moving steadily toward government by men instead of by laws in the United States of America.

We need not remind you that great fundamental issues are at stake in this contest. The fate of the free Republic established by the Founding Fathers at Philadelphia when they wrote the Constitution hangs in the balance.

The revered tradition that no President shall seek a third term has been assailed by men burning with an insatiable lust for power. It is our grave responsibility to see that the effort is defeated. We must not take a dangerous step, a step which may well lead to dictatorship.

The Republican Party rejoices that in you it has provided the Nation with a man who is preeminently qualified to meet the requirements of this critical period. It rejoices that your nomination has been enthusiastically acclaimed by independent Jeffersonian Democrats, progressives, liberals and Republicans alike.

You are not the hope of one political party; you are the hope of a majority of the American people. They want you boldly to lead this great fight, this battle to perpetuate free government in this land of liberty, to restore equal justice, opportunities and jobs to the American people; to keep this country safe and secure from attacks within and without our boundaries.

May God b l e s s you and strengthen you for the heavy tasks which lie ahead.

Indiana Legislator Introduces Martin At Willkie Ceremony

The text of the address by Representative H a l l e c k, of Indiana, introducing Republican National Chairman Martin at the Willkie notification ceremonies follows:

Indiana is proud of the place destiny has given to her today—proud that there has been called to lead this mighty Nation to safety, happiness and prosperity a son of Indiana, Wendell Willkie.

Eighty-five years ago, the Republican Party was organized to rescue America from a tragic crisis. Today the party is again called to service to save a Nation of 130,000,000 resourceful, energetic and courageous people from the ravages of continuing depression within and the threat of aggression from without.

The torch of liberty, freedom and opportunity has been handed to a native son of Indiana. He will hold it high, leading this new crusade for American principles in government and for the reestablishment of law as the ultimate guarantee of both individual and national security.

America wants to resume the march of progress. The Republican Party is the instrument through which the American people have determined to work for the reestablishment of enlightened patriotism in the administration of national affairs. Beneath our banners are rallied members of all parties. They are determined that this country shall prosper and progress according to the skill and resources with which it is blessed.

Some weeks ago it was my high honor to present the name of Wendell Willkie to the Republican Convention at Philadelphia. I nominated him with heartfelt enthusiasm because I know him to be a great American who understands the problems of all of our people—because he is a capable administrator of clear vision and great ability, and a citizen of unlimited patriotic devotion.

Lauds Martin

After the Philadelphia Convention had named Wendell Willkie for the Presidency and Charles McNary for the Vice Presidency, it passed unanimously a resolution of thanks to Congressman Joseph W. Martin, jr., for his able and fair direction of the convention as its chairman. A week later Joe was named by Wendell Willkie to direct the Republican National Committee.

This appointment and high responsibility come to Joe Martin after almost 30 years of continuous service to the Republican Party. He began as a precinct worker in his native town of North Attleboro, Mass. He served in the State Legislature and was in the State Senate with Calvin Coolidge. He was, for a time, secretary of the Republican State Committee of Massachusetts. He next advanced to Congress, where he is now serving his sixteenth year.

REPRESENTATIVE HALLECK

Throughout the New Deal years, Joe Martin has been a stalwart American. He served on the Rules Committee in those trying days when a New Deal majority lost all sense of responsibility and allowed the Congress to become a mere rubber stamp. But Joe never gave up the fight for constitutional principles and orderly procedures.

In 1937 he was elected chairman of the National Republican Congressional Committee, and in that capacity directed the 1938 campaign, which resulted in doubling the number of Republican members in the House of Representatives and marked the turning of the tide which already signalizes a national triumph next November.

When the Seventy-sixth Congress assembled in January, 1939, Joe Martin was unanimously elected minority leader. In that capacity he has done more to restore balanced constitutional government than any other individual in the United States. To work with him and for him has been a real privilege.

Assails New Deal "Waste"

To Joe Martin now has been given the direction of this campaign to restore American Government to the American people—to turn out an Administration which has wasted billions during the last seven years, while neglecting the urgent problem of national defense—to place in the White House a man who has worked with his hands, who has won success by his own efforts, and whose heart and spirit are in tune with the aspirations of the American people for progress, security and real recovery.

I present to you the man who will direct our victorious campaign—the Hon. Joseph W. Martin, jr., of Massachusetts, Republican Leader in the House of Representatives and chairman of the Republican National Committee.

Accuses Roosevelt Of Manufacturing Panic at Home, 'Courting War'

Leaders Hail Willkie Speech Of Acceptance

Republicans Elated But Democrats See Only 'Generalities'

By the Associated Press

Here are some comments on the acceptance address yesterday of the Republican Presidential nominee, Wendell Willkie:

FORMER PRESIDENT HERBERT HOOVER at Palo Alto, Calif.—Mr. Willkie's address is the call of a strong man to strong men and women. It is a call for revitalization of the productive forces of America, that we may meet the evils that are overcoming mankind. It is a call to the strength and the sacrifice of the American people that again the Nation may grow economically, morally and spiritually. It is a call of hope for our country.

SENATOR McNARY, of Oregon, the Republican Vice Presidential nominee—It was a straightforward and dynamic address, not too critical but full of confidence in his ability to revitalize America.

SENATOR GILLETTE (Democrat), of Iowa—His comments on foreign policy are remarkable in what they do not say. He fails to draw an issue there. The main difference betwen Mr. Willkie and our party on domestic issues is that he says he believes in collective bargaining, the wage-hour law and these other things, and we have translated them into legislation.

SENATOR VANDENBERG (Republican), of Michigan—This speech is one of the greatest in our generation. It sounds the challenge to a crusade I have long been waiting for. In this day of desperately complicated issues it is impossible for frank men to agree with each other on everything. But I disagree with less and I agree with more in this speech than in any I have heard in years. Having captured the country's imagination, I expect Mr. Willkie now to capture its confidence and then its votes.

REPRESENTATIVE MICHENER (Republican), Michigan—The speech is clearly Willkie-esque—specific, outspoken and there can be no question about where Mr. Willkie stands on the vital issues of the day.

REPRESENTATIVE LE COMPTE (Republican), Iowa—It appears to me that the third term is going to be the principal issue in the campaign.

REPRESENTATIVE MURDOCK (Democrat), Utah—Mr. Willkie, like other so-called Republican leaders, being devoid of any affirmative program of his own, reservedly approved the New Deal program, but would substitute inexperience in its Administration.

REPRESENTATIVE SCHAFER (Republican), Wisconsin—Willkie's indorsement of some form of selective military service does not mean that he is for compulsory military service.

REPRESENTATIVE LUDLOW (Democrat), Indiana—I'm wondering how any issues can be raised in this year's campaign since Mr. Willkie's speech, as I analyze it, seems to indicate he stands for about the same things as President Roosevelt. Where is a fellow who wants a change to go?

SENATOR MINTON (Democrat), Indiana, assistant Senate Democratic leader—It was the worst major political speech I ever listened to.

SENATOR HILL (Democrat), Alabama, who nominated President Roosevelt at Chicago—A few more speeches like that and he will have to have a joint discussion to get a crowd.

REPRESENTATIVE MARTIN (Republican), Iowa—It sounds as if he will wage a vigorous campaign and won't pull any punches.

REPRESENTATIVE ANDERSON (Republican), California—I have always believed that rival candidates for important issues should discuss the issues together before the people.

REPRESENTATIVE WOODRUFF (Republican), Michigan—I am quite in agreement with what he has to say, especially about the practice of the President in constantly berating and belaboring foreign nations and at the same time doing nothing for our national defense.

CHAIRMAN BLOOM (Democrat), New York, of the House Foreign Affairs Committee—Throughout all of his speech, he criticized but did not hold out one constructive method or way in which he was going to accomplish these objectives which he spoke about. He straddled the way in which to secure trained and competent manpower for national defense. Otherwise it was a grand Democratic speech in which he practically indorsed the policies, especially the foreign policy, as advocated by President Roosevelt.

REPRESENTATIVE DOUGHTON (Democrat), of North Carolina—His challenge to Mr. Roosevelt to a debate sounds like peanut politics to me.

SENATOR WHEELER (Democrat), Montana—The speech is composed of generalities in which we good Americans all believe. With reference to conscription, he again deals in generalities, without stating whether he is for compulsory military training in peacetime, but undoubtedly it will be so interpreted by those who favor conscription.

NORMAN THOMAS, Socialist candidate for President in New York—He agreed with Mr. Roosevelt's entire program of social reform and said it was leading to disaster.

Former A.E.F. Officers Donate Ambulance

J. S. Douglas, jr., 913 Cameron street, Alexandria, Va., who was a captain of Infantry with the Eightieth Division during the World War, yesterday reported that the division's name had been placed on an ambulance the former officers donated to the British in the present war.

The Eightieth Division was brigaded with the British in northern Francefrom June to August, 1918. All former officers were circularized by a committee of the division for contributions toward purchase of the ambulance. Receipt of the vehicle abroad was reported to the committee, according to Douglas, in a letter from Stephen Galatti, executive chairman of the American field service.

Press Receives Willkie's Talk With Favor

Copyright by New York Tribune, Inc.

Following are excerpts from editorials in the Nation's leading newspapers on Wendell Willkie's speech at Elwood, Ind., yesterday:

KANSAS CITY STAR—The Star believes the speech will meet the high expectations with which it was awaited. It shows the quality of great leadership in a man of affairs who has not lost the common touch. It may not please those who believe this Nation should go back to the old days if the boom era. It should satisfy those who were waiting for a man to lead the country forward to deal wisely and successfully with the new problems of the new age.

LOS ANGELES TIMES—. . . The nominee's meteoric rise to national leadership has built up a Willkie legend to challenge the abilities of a superman. That was the test he had to meet and his success was the greater in that no conscious effort to meet it was apparent. There was no straining for oratorical effect. He rose at times to heights of genuine eloquence, but it was the eloquence of sincerity and conviction and not the fatty floridity of a hired phrasemaker. One felt instinctively that these were Mr. Willkie's own ideas in his own words and what they lacked in lacquered forensics they made up in punch and power.

RICHMOND (VA.) TIMES-DISPATCH—In both the domestic and the foreign field, Wendell Willkie's well-written, but not as well-delivered, acceptance address followed approximately the pattern which those familiar with his views had anticipated. The speech probably had too big an advance build-up. Many expected the impossible. It was a good speech, but it contained no startling surprises. While Mr. Willkie's indorsement of "some form of selective service" had been predicted, it is regrettable that he did not say which form he would like to see enacted. There is too much politics in the defense problem already.

INDIANAPOLIS STAR — Wendell L. Willkie's speech at Elwood yesterday accepting the Republican Presidential nomination was a powerful presentation of the problems before the people of this country. He sees the whole situation clearly, knows what he is talking about and does not hesitate to make known what he thinks. . . . Any who may have had doubt as to his being the one to lead the people in the present emergency now know he is preeminently the right man for the task he has undertaken.

Mr. Willkie did not pull his punches on any issue of real importance at this time.

ATLANTA CONSTITUTION—It must be conceded, ungrudgingly, that the principles enunciated at Elwood, Ind., are principles with which every loyal American can agree. It is only on the methods of achieving the results set forth that there can be political division. After reading the Willkie speech there is inevitably a great feeling of reassurance, for it makes plain that whatever the outcome of the election next November, the man at the head of this Nation will be worthy of the trust of all its citizens.

CHICAGO TRIBUNE—Mr. Willkie's acceptance speech at Elwood is a remarkable document. The man who wrote and delivered that address is no ordinary politician angling for this and that block of votes with alluring baits. He has convictions and the courage to state them. He is not an orator in the conventional sense. He was the gift of candor. Those who listened to the speech or read it know where Willkie stands on the more controversial questions which will be decided by the voters in November.

CLEVELAND PLAIN DEALER—A new voice is heard in the land. It is a voice of authority, of confident leadership, of appeal to Americans to stand by the faith of their fathers, to remain steadfast for the American way of life. A new character of leader arises to face a world confused in its thinking. On the economic front the Willkie program rings like a clarion. No more spending for recovery, but now economy wherever possible.

NEW YORK TIMES—Mr. Willkie offers to meet the President in "the tradition of face-to-face debate that is justly honored among our American political traditions. It is an offer that deserves to be accepted; for it would lift the discussion of the forthcoming campaign to a high level and reaffirming dignity of the Democratic process. But whether or not the offer is accepted, Mr. Willkie deserves the gratitude of all Americans for the tone that he has set in this first speech of the campaign. He has talked fairly to the American people. He has talked about real issues. He has met the test of a great occasion with courage and candor and foresight that do him honor.

BALTIMORE SUN—Millions of thoughtful Americans of genuinely liberal convictions have been fearful of the implications of the New Deal and have wondered whether it was indeed as necessary and as inevitable as Mr. Roosevelt has said. To these persons the Willkie speech provides the answer they have sought. There is a future for these United States of America, a future not of scarcity but of plenty, a future not of servile security but of adventurous freedom, a future in which the citizen himself and not the Government will have responsibility for his own welfare for his own advancement, his own success in the competitive struggle.

NEW YORK HERALD TRIBUNE—Wendell Willkie's speech of acceptance at Elwood, Ind., yesterday afternoon was not so much a statement of political principles as a confession of political faith. To this extent it was in keeping with the Willkie tradition. Simple, modest but confident, it breathed his conviction that the American people have the strength and ability not only to pull themselves out of the depression of the last decade, but to face bravely the hardships that will be unavoidable, as the war and its aftermath take their full toll in economic, political and social dislocations. He warned frankly that the road ahead is not an easy one—that everyone who works will have to work a little harder, that housewives will have to plan a little more carefully, that all will be called upon for sacrifices in the service of their country. But through it all ran a firm note of optimism—the conviction that by adopting the philosophy of production in place of the New Deal's philosophy of spending, America would go forward triumphantly.

Roosevelt Courts War, Says Willkie

Challenges President To Debate Issues In Tour of Nation

in general to join him in a crusade which he hopes will land him in the White House in January.

The great multitude, stretching out in the 60-acre Callaway Park farther than the eye could see from the press box, cheered Willkie's debate proposal so long and so vigorously that he had to halt his speech.

Wants Third-Term Debate

"Go get him, boy!" a nearby farmer yelled. "Attaboy!" cried others. Willkie, one of the few men in the park who insisted on wearing a coat in the 102 temperature, took off his spectacles and mopped his perspiring brow. The band played "Hail, Hail, the Gang's All Here."

When he was able to continue, Willkie referred to Roosevelt's statement, as expressed in his message to the Chicago convention, that he didn't have "either the time or the inclination to engage in purely political debate." Willkie said: "I do not think the issues at stake are 'purely political.' In my opinion they concern the life and death of democracy.

"I make this a proposal respectfully to a man upon whose shoulders rests the cares of the state. But I make it in dead earnest."

Another booming cheer arose when Willkie said he wanted to debate the third-term issue with President Roosevelt.

"And also," he said, "I would like to debate the question of the assumption by this President, in seeking a third term, of a greater public confidence than was accorded to our Presidential giants, Washington, Jefferson, Cleveland, Theodore Roosevelt and Woodrow Wilson."

Willkie's assault on President Roosevelt's handling of foreign affairs was a terrific one.

He said solemnly that a defeat of Great Britain by Nazi Germany and the loss of the British fleet would be a "calamity" for the United States.

He accordingly indorsed President Roosevelt's statement that the United States would extend to the opponents of force (the British in this case) the "material resources" of this Nation, while at the same time strengthening America's defenses. But here Willkie departed from Roosevelt, and in a blistering passage, denounced the President's conduct of foreign affairs.

Obviously referring to Mr. Roosevelt's "stab in the back" philippic against Mussolini, among other things, Willkie said:

"He (Roosevelt) has dabbled in inflammatory statements and manufactured panics. Of course, we in America like to speak our minds freely, but this does not mean that at a critical period in our history our President should cause bitterness and confusion for the sake of a little political oratory.

"The President's attacks on foreign powers have been useless and dangerous.

"He has courted a war for which the country is hopelessly unprepared and which it emphatically does not want.

Denounces European "Meddling"

"He has secretly meddled in the affairs of Europe and he has even unscrupulously encouraged other countries to hope for more help than we are able to give."

A collective "Whew!" arose from the crowd.

Willkie recalled the motto of Theodore Roosevelt: "Walk softly and carry a big stick."

That is still good American doctrine in 1940," said Willkie. "Under the present Administration the country has been placed in the false position of shouting insults and not even beginning to prepare to take the consequences."

Willkie sharply criticized the President for not taking the American people into his confidence and giving them the facts. "Candor in these times," he said, "is the hope of democracy. We must not kid ourselves any longer. We must begin to tell ourselves the truth right here—and right now."

Willkie did not guarantee peace, or pledge himself never to send American troops to fight on foreign soil.

"No man can guarantee to maintain peace," he said. "Peace is not something that a nation can achieve by itself.

"It also depends on what some other country does. It is neither practical, nor desirable, to adopt a foreign program committing the United States to future action under unknown circumstances."

Tremendous pressure had been brought on Willkie to at least remain silent on the conscription issue. But to have done that would have violated his policy of candor—an honest answer to the questions of the day.

He said: "We must not shirk the necessity of preparing our sons to take care of themselves in case the defense of America leads to war. . . .

"I cannot ask the American people to put their faith in me without recording my convictions that some form of selective service is the only democratic way in which to secure the trained and competent manpower we need for national defense."

If Willkie dodged any question in his 6,500-word speech today, no one here could think of it offhand.

Irked by Manuscript

True, he had nothing to say about the proposal to sell or trade 50 American destroyers to Britain. But then neither has President Roosevelt said anything about that publicly. Willkie, like Al Smith and many other orators, does better when he is able to speak without a manuscript. He seemed irked today by the necessity of reading his speech.

He would toss his large, shaggy head up in the air, wave his arm and then find himself far off track.

He stood on a platform that was like the flying bridge of a ship. Behind him was a colossal picture of himself, done in oils. Over him was a swamp oak, but it gave him precious little protection from the stifling heat.

On the platform were Senator Robert A. Taft, of Ohio, his closest rival for the nomination in Philadelphia, and other bigwigs of the G. O. P.

Four past national commanders of the American Legion also were there, and well-known figures in the amusement world like Walter O'Keefe.

Arrayed before him was unquestionably the largest crowd that ever heard a Presidential candidate accept the nomination.

They had begun gathering the night before, parking their cars in the cornfields and sleeping where they were.

Early this morning Callaway Park and its environs looked like a refugee camp in Europe. Legs and arms were sticking out of car windows and doors while their owners slept.

Women who had already awakened could be seen combing their hair or nursing their babies. For the most part they appeared to be farmers or farmhands. But actually there was a good cross section of America there—rich men, men not so rich, and men on relief. When Willkie stuck out his chin and turned his deep barytone on the question of production and employment, they all joined in the applause.

He likened the New Deal to the Blum government in France, accusing it of having got the United States entangled in "unfruitful political" adventures and of having stirred up hatred between capital and labor.

"The promises of the present Administration cannot lead you to victory against Hitler, or against any one else," he said.

"This Administration stands for principles exactly opposite to mine. It does not preach the doctrine of growth. It preaches the doctrine of division. We are not asked to make more for ourselves. We are asked to divide that which we already have.

"The New Deal doctrine does not seek risk, it seeks safety. Let us call it the 'I pass' doctrine. The New Deal dealt it, and refused to make any more bets on the American future.

"American liberalism does not consist merely in reforming things. It consists also in making things. . . .

"I stand for the restoration of full production and reemployment by private enterprise in America. . . .

"It is a statement of fact, and no longer a political accusation, that the New Deal has failed in its program of economic rehabilitation.

"And the victims of its failure are the very persons whose cause it professes to champion."

Promises to Outdistance Hitler

Willkie gave an almost blanket indorsement of New Deal reforms, such as minimum wages and maximum hours, regulation of banking and securities, and rural electrification. But he emphatically did not indorse the New Deal philosophy of scarcity and spending. He said: "I charge that the course this Administration is following will lead us, like France, to the end of the road. I say that this course will lead us to economic disintegration and dictatorship."

"I say that we must substitute for this philosophy of spending the philosophy of production. You cannot buy freedom; you must make it."

"If America is to compete with Hitler's Germany," Willkie said, "it must enter into competition of energy against energy, production against production, brains against brains and salesmanship against salesmanship."

He added: "I promise, by returning to those same American principles that overcame German autocracy once before, both in business and in war, to outdistance Hitler in any contest he chooses in 1940 or after.

"And I promise that when we beat him, we shall beat him on our own terms, in our own American way."

Dedicating himself to making America strong, a task, he said, in which the New Deal had failed miserably, Willkie made this statement with obvious deep feeling:

"But I say this, too, in the pursuit of that goal I shall not lead you down the easy road. If I am chosen the leader of this democracy as I am now of the Republican Party, I shall lead you down the road of sacrifice and service to your country."

"This statement, reminiscent of Winston Churchill's "blood, toil, tears and sweat" remark, was vigorously applauded.

Willkie arrived in Elwood on an eight-car special train shortly in the afternoon. With him were Mrs. Willkie, her mother, Mrs. Phillip Wilk, and young Phillip Willkie.

Serenaded by Legionnaires

The Republican nominee was serenaded by the drum and bugle corps of his old American Legion post from Akron, Ohio. The Legionnaires serenaded the strapping Hoosier with "God Bless America," the Irving Berlin hymn that later was to share honors with "the Star-Spangled Banner" when John Charles Thomas sang at Calloway Park.

Willkie and members of his family rode through crowd-packed streets in a stream-lined Lincoln. He stood up the entire way, smiling happily and waving his straw skimmer.

In the parade ahead were elephants with pretty "Miss Columbias" as mahouts. Old-fashioned political marching clubs, bands with strutting drum majors, fife and drum corps, including a gray haired outfit of fifers and drummers representing old "Doc" Townsend, the pension man, and the usual amateur clowns riding mules.

The caravan stopped off at the Elwood High School, where the hero of the day was graduated some 35 years ago. Here he greeted his friends, wiped his brow and remarked that it looked like "a hot time in the old town tonight."

Introduced by Senator Davis

He was introduced by Senator James J. (Puddler Jim) Davis, of Pennsylvania, who once worked in the tin plate mill in Elwood. From the high school, Willkie went on to Callaway Park, moving at a snail's pace through the dense, shouting crowd.

The invocation at the notification ceremony was delivered by Dr. William Lowe Bryan, president emeritus of Indiana University.

Representative Charles Halleck, of Indiana, then presented Representative Joseph W. Martin, of Massachusetts, who formally notified Willkie that he had been chosen as the Republican nominee.

Martin, who will manage Willkie's campaign, explained that today's custom originated at a time when men had to travel a long distance on horseback to carry the tidings of a nomination to the candidate.

"Your nomination at Philadelphia did not come from any scheming clique of political bosses," he told Willkie.

"It did not come from any groups of conspirators anxious to retain their control of the government for selfish purposes. Your nomination was the result of nationwide demand of a great people anxious about their own future and that of their government.

"A Dangerous Step"

"No one can say that it does not represent a free choice by the people."

Taking cracks at President Roosevelt, Martin said: "The revered tradition that no President shall seek a third term has been assailed by men burning with an insatiable lust for power. It is our grave responsibility to see that the effort is defeated. We must not take a dangerous step, a step which may well lead to dictatorship."

As Willkie came forward to make the most important speech of his 48 years, the band played "Back Home in Indiana."

The crowd took up the yell that the nominee has been hearing ever since Philadelphia—"We want Willkie! We want Willkie!"

Some of the women folks called for Mrs. Willkie and the big fellow called to her to come forward.

As the amazingly young looking Mrs. Willkie drifted back to her place, Willkie put on his glasses, held up a hand and cut loose.

When it was all over, with the crowds still yelling, Willkie raised his hand again to get silence while Bishop Francis Noll, of the Fort Wayne Diocese of the Catholic Church, pronounced benediction. What the country and the world may think of it remains to determine, but the 11,000 natives of Elwood and the thousands who are deserting it tonight are convinced that Willkie's speech today was one of the greatest ever delivered by an American politician.

To Talk Maine Trip With Martin

Rushville, Ind., Aug. 17 (AP).—Wendell L. Willkie, returning here tonight after his acceptance address in Elwood, said he would discuss tomorrow with Chairman Joe Martin of the Republican National Committee whether he would go on a campaigning trip to Maine.

Willkie's aides said it was probable that he would open his campaign in Coffeyville, Kans., where he taught high school history in 1913 and 1914.

Forum to Debate Public Ownership

Public ownership of electric power will be debated by legislators and others in a public forum in the Willard room of the Willard Hotel, beginning at 7 p. m. today. From 7 to 8 the discussion will be broadcast nationally over the Mutual Broadcasting System. Admission is free.

Theodore Granik arranged the program as part of a series of similar Sunday night discussions. The set portion of the program will be followed by an extemporaneous panel discussion.

Senator Styles Bridges (Republican), of New Hampshire, will talk in opposition to public ownership, and Representative John E. Rankin (Democrat), of Mississippi, father of the TVA legislation, will speak in favor of it. Following their prepared statements there will be discussion opened by Representative Everett M. Dirksen (Republican), of Illinois; Representative George H. Bender (Republican), of Ohio; Senator Homer T. Bone (Democrat), of Washington, and Senator H. H. Schwartz (Democrat), of Wyoming. Granik will preside.

Mrs. Willkie Thrilled, Despite Having Heard Speech Before

By the Associated Press

Elwood, Ind., Aug. 17.—Her face flushed from the heat, her white sandals dusty, but her large blue eyes shining with pride, Mrs. Wendell L. Willkie put this day—Saturday, Auust 17—down as one she will always remember.

From a vantage point on the platform she watched her husband be notified that he was the Republican Presidential nominee. She rode beside him, sitting on the top of the back seat on an open automobile, in a parade through his native town.

It was hot—terribly hot. There were crowds. They packed the sidewalks of the small city and filled the streets so that the cars in the Willkie parade kept in line only by staying bumper-to-bumper. Dust swirled like a gray mist.

"But wasn't it thrilling—amazing," Mrs. Willkie said afterward when she boarded the special train to take the family back to Rushville for a few days' visit.

Asked what she considered her "biggest moment" in the carnival-like turnout which Elwood gave its "favorite son," Mrs. Willkie put her hand to her forehead in a moment's thought.

"The crowd—? Yes, it was the biggest crowd I had ever seen. You know, I really didn't expect to see such a crowd. I thought it had been talked up so much people would stay away for fear of crowds.

"Was it when Wendell first started speaking? Well, maybe. I had heard his speech—heard him try it out so many times—that I almost knew it word for word.

"I think I was most amazed that people could listen so closely when they were so uncomfortable in the heat. Maybe that was my "biggest moment."

And how did Phil—the Willkies' 20-year-old son enjoy it?

"Oh, this younger generation, they sort of pass things off. But I know that he was very proud of his dad," his mother said.

One other solemn, intent watcher, who smiled with satisfaction every now and then, was Mrs. Cora Wilk, 73, of Rushville, Willkie's mother-in-law. She sat beside Mrs. Willkie.

Asked what she thought of Willkie's acceptance speech, Mrs. Wilk responded, "It was fine."

U.S. Listening Posts At Horta, Cayenne

The State Department disclosed yesterday that it was establishing diplomatic listening posts at Horta, in the Azores Islands, an airway stop between Europe and the United States, and at Cayenne, French Guiana, in South America.

United States consulates will be established at the two points, the department reported.

Foster H. Kreis, of Minnesota, vice consul at Funchal, Madeira, has been appointed vice consul at Horta.

Adrian B. Colquitt, of Savannah, Ga., third secretary of the American Embassy and American vice consul at Panama, has been assigned to serve as vice consul at Cayenne.

The announcement followed by one week the department's disclosure that it was opening consulates at Dakar, French West Africa, and at St. Pierre-Miquelon, French possession off the coast of Canada.

French possessions in the Western Hemisphere have been regarded here as possible subjects for action under the Pan-American agreements recently made at Havana, Cuba. The Act of Havana provides for establishment of provisional administrations in foreign possessions in this hemisphere which are threatened by a non-American change in sovereignty.

Niggeling Throttles Indians, Browns Win, 2-1

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

To Whom It May Concern:

Boston, Aug. 17.—Somebody ought to tell Clark Griffith that touchdowns don't win baseball games . . . A week after he signed Jim Mallory, North Carolina U.'s pass-catching end, he signed Jim Gillette, U. of Virginia's pass-throwing halfback, to a Nats' contract . . . Mallory is an outfielder and Gillette a first baseman . . . Gillette, who has been drafted by the Green Bay Packers, must choose between pro football and baseball . . . Griffith is emphatic in his conviction that the two sports don't mix . . . Football players become muscle bound, he has always claimed . . . Little Johnny Adams, one of the best of the 1940 jockeys, has been doing very well for himself of late . . . On the last three Saturday afternoons he has won stake races with purses totaling $95,000 . . . His end was the conventional ten per center or $9,500, which the Internal Revenue Bureau will doubtless be glad to know . . . Red Sox pitchers have gone the route only 26 times this season in 112 games . . . In other words, Joe Cronin's starting pitcher has been knocked out of the box in five of every six games.

POVICH

Bill Terry's deal to buy the Boston Bees fell through when the bank that controls the club asked him for a $75,000 cash down payment . . . Ossie Bluege and Miss Maxwell will wed in the fall . . . He says . . . The owners of the Tropical Park race track are said to have backed the wrong man in the last Florida election and the track may fold . . . But they will set up business again at the defunct Gulfstream Park 15 miles north of Miami . . . Tim Mara, owner of the New York Giants football team, says he doesn't fear the Washington Redskins . . . The team the Giants must beat out for the Eastern championship is the Philadelphia Eagles, according to Mara . . . The Boston hotel in which Willie Hershberger, Reds' catcher, took his life for years refused to admit baseball teams . . . on the grounds that folks connected with professional sports were simply too vulgar . . . Joe Engel is the latest man to be linked with the purchase of the Bees . . . But the report doesn't ring true, because Engel makes more money selling rookies to the big leagues than most major league club owners earn in a highly successful season . . . For example: Engel two years ago sold Outfielder Dee Miles to the Athletics for $20,000 plus Bill Nicholson whom the A's tossed into the deal . . . Last year Engel sold Nicholson to the Cubs for $30,000.

Alice Marble, winner of nine various national tennis titles and six Wimbledon champions, was carried off the court at Wimbledon in 1934 on a stretcher and was told by Doctors that she would never play tennis again . . . Those doctors should return their fees . . . When Gus Sonnenberg wrestles in New England, he is billed as the former Dartmouth tackle . . . When he wrestled the other night in Detroit, he was billed as the former University of Detroit tackle . . . Nobody was lying, because Sonnenberg played tackle at both schools . . . Little Roy Weatherly, most spirited and perhaps the best ball player on the Cleveland Club, walked into the Indians' dugout the other day at Detroit and announced, in some disgust at his pals: "I'm the only guy on this club who is hustling . . ." Manager Oscar Vitt is so fond of Weatherly's playing that he has prevailed on the front office to give the outfielder a bonus if he will refrain from insulting umpires and thus avoid being thumbed out of ball games . . . Don Budge declares a new patented tennis court with a crushed stone surface on a cinder base gives a better footing and truer bounds than grass courts.

Whenever the Yankees want to get rid of First Baseman Babe Dahlgren, as reports say they contemplate, they will find an eager buyer in Clark Griffith . . . "I don't care what his batting average is," said Griffith, "he's the best fielding first baseman in the league and he drives in those runs . . ." That description would also fit Joe Kuhel, whom Griffith traded away for a lumbering hulk named Zeke Bonura . . . Alabama Rewell, the Bees' rookie second baseman who is leading the National League batters with a .339 average, has pasted Chicago pitching for a .486 figure this season . . . The Yanks sent Oral Hildebrand to Kansas City, but they can't make him pitch there . . . He refuses to work for a minor league salary . . . when Ted Williams returned to Fenway Park after his pop-off speech against Boston fans and Boston newspapermen, he was cheered by the ladies' day guests and booed by the cash customers.

Fenelon Wins Saratoga's 71st Travers

Bimelech Declared Out Because of Injury; Your Chance Runs Second

By the United Press

Saratoga Springs, N. Y., Aug. 17.—Bimelech said good-by to the turf today exactly as Johnstown bid adieu a year ago, and the unexpected retirement completely overshadowed the spectacular triumphof Belair Stud's Fenelon in the seventy-first running of the Travers Stake—oldest horse race in America.

Bimelech was scratched early in the day, to the disappointment of a near-record crowd of 20,664 visitors, and not until several hours later did Col. E. R. Bradley announce that the son of Black Toney had injured himself in a workout and could not run again this year.

There were reports that Bimelech had broken a bone in his foot and would go on the shelf permanently, but Bradley told the United Press his colt had bruised a heel when he stepped on a stone.

Questioned directly, the owner reiterated that "Bimelech was out for the season." The withdrawal came as an almost exact parallel to that of Johnstown, who was scratched from the Travers with a quarter crack and never ran again. Bimelech, like Big John, was the leading contender for the 3-year-old title until his defection.

Standings in Air

Despite the thrilling nose triumph Fenelon scored over Mrs. G. D. Widener's Your Chance in the day's mile-and-a-quarter feature, Bimelech's retirement left the divisional standings completely up in the air. He has won the Preakness and Belmont Stakes for earnings of $110,005 and a wide lead, but last season Johnstown won the Kentucky Derby, the Belmont and numerous other purses, yet Challedon was given the title.

Fenelon won a close verdict over Your Chance after Breckinridge Long's undefeated Nasca turned back the highly favored Level Best and four other juvenile fillies in the forty-ninth running of the companion feature, the $10,000 Spinaway Stakes.

The son of Sir Gallahad III took the lead on the backstretch turn after running well up all the way and shaded Your Chance in a photograph finish after a brilliant stretch contest.

The Finest Leads

The Finest went out in front at once, but Fenelon ran right with him. Gramps stayed in the contention for a half mile, then tired. Your Chance ran far back, then uncorked his usual late run in the stretch. It missed by inches. Fenelon, ridden by Jimmy Stout, was timed in 2:05 2-5 on a fast track, and earned $17,425 net to boost his seasonal earnings to $31,450. He paid $4.70, $2.30 and $2.60 in the mutuels as part of a three-ply entry which included Asp and Snow Ridge.

Your Chance paid $2.60 and $2.70. He was ridden by Wayne Wright after his regular jockey, Harry Richards, was injured slightly in a spill earlier in the program. Asp, who was forced to come behind for the show, paid $2.60. The handle on the event was $127,127, highest of the meeting, and the daily total reached $774,393—another new high.

Bosox Pound Leonard, Win Slugfest, 12-9

By Shirley Povich.
Post Staff Writer

Boston, Aug. 17.—Dutch Leonard held the Red Sox to five singles today, but don't jump to conclusions. He also pitched 'em six doubles, three home runs and a triple. That being the case, the Nats took a fine, old-fashioned shellacking, 12 to 9.

The Dutchman and his knuckleball were—with a nod to the Legion of Decency—no good. He took perhaps his worst beating since joining the Washington team three years ago. When the Red Sox weren't hitting the ball over the fences, they were making a pretty fair stab at battering it through 'em. They weren't trifling much with singles.

It was a pathetic performance by Leonard, who was creating Boston runs faster than the Nats could produce their own, and the Nats were doing better than a fair job of it today. They gave him a 3-0 lead to start with in the first inning and when he pitched that margin away by the end of the second, they snatched a 6-5 lead for him in the seventh.

But Leonard couldn't hold a lead today if it had hands and was strapped around his back. He pitched five runs right back at the Red Sox in the seventh, including two home runs. Joe Cronin tied the score with a homer right off the bat and then Dom DiMaggio lifted one over the leftfield wall a bit later with a man on base.

The Nats were in there fighting, though. They bounced right back in the eighth inning, drove young Yank Terry out of the box and came up with three runs that narrowed the Boston lead to 10-9.

Then Alex Carrasquel got the pitching job in the ninth and the ball game went poof! The Venezuelan walked a batter, pitched a single to Jim Tabor, and then served up the Red Sox's seventh and eighth two-baggers of the afternoon.

Jimmy Foxx was here again this afternoon—with his thirty-second homer of the season, his sixth in five days. It happened in the first inning and took a two-run bite out of Leonard's 3-0 lead. Nineteen thousand fans, most of 'em playground kids, set in on the slugfest and were very much pleased.

All told, the Red Sox lammed out

Sam Snead, McSpaden Tie in Canadian Open

Early Leader Falters and Finishes With 281 Total; to Playoff Tomorrow; Al Houghton's 295 Total Is in the Money

By the Associated Press

Toronto, Aug. 17.—Sam Snead's golf game collapsed today after two sensatinoal rounds and the West Virginia clouter tied with Harold (Jug) McSpaden, the defending champion, for the Canadian Open golf championship. Each finished the regulation 92 holes with a total of 281.

Snead, who plays from Shawnee-on-Delaware, Pa., was five strokes ahead of the field at the halfway mark yesterday with 133. He took a 75 on this morning's round then finished with a 73. McSpaden, in third place at the halfway mark, still trailed by four strokes after a morning 73 but he finished with a 69, two under par to tie Snead.

Despite his collapse, Snead rallied at the finish to show some of the same kind of golf he had played in beating par by nine strokes on the first two rounds. He had a 38, three over par, for the out nine this afternoon, then pulled his game together and came home in 34, one under regulation figures.

Snead and McSpaden will play off Monday for the title over 18 holes.

Mangrum Third

Ray Mangrum, of Oakmont, Pa., who was second at the halfway mark with 138, also slipped over par but he turned in creditable rounds of 74-71 today to take third place, two strokes behind the leaders. Ralph Guldahl, of Chicago, two-time United States Open champion, fired a 68 on the final round to finish fourth with 284.

Behind him came Vic Ghezzi, of Deal, N. J., with a 73 and 69 for 285 and Ky Laffoon, of Chicago, two-time United States Open champion, and Paul Runyan, of White Plains, N. Y., tied at 286.

Amateur laurels went to Ted Bishop, of Boston, who fired a par 71 on the final round to finish with 292.

Stan Horne, of Montreal, and Bob Gray, of Ottawa, tied for first place among the Canadian pros with 288's. They announced they would split first and second prize money for the Canadians and decide low

X-Ray Discloses Lefty Grove Broke Foot Here Sunday

By the Associated Press

Boston, Aug. 17.—X-ray photographs disclosed today that Robert Moses "Lefty" Grove, veteran pitcher of the Boston Red Sox, suffered a broken bone in the left foot, when he was struck on the instep by a foul ball off his own bat in Washington last Sunday.

Red Sox officials said that Gorve, who has a season record of six victories and three defeats, probably would be lost to the team for the rest of the season.

Hack Gives Cubs 6-5 Edge In 13th Inning

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Aug. 17.—Stanley Hack was the big noise in the Chicago Cubs' 6-to-5 victory over the Pittsburgh Pirates today in 13 innings, doubling home the tying score in the ninth and singling home the winning run.

The Pirates scored all their runs in the first five innings while Bob Klinger was holding the Cubs scoreless. But Chicago sent the Buc starter to the showers in the eighth when the Cubs came within one run of tying the score.

After Hack's double tied the score in the ninth, the Cubs sent Claude Passeau to the mound as the fifth pitcher. He gave up three hits in four innings but was never in trouble as he won his fourteenth victory.

Snaps Streak Of Leaders; Gives 5 Hits

National League Cast-Off Is Master of Tribe and Beats Mel Harder Who Cracks

By the Associated Press

Cleveland, Aug. 17.—Johnny Niggeling, a fugitive from the National League, held the Cleveland Indians to five hits today and St. Louis squeezed out a 2-to-1 decision which snapped the league leaders' victory streak at five games.

The setback didn't cost the Indians any of the three game lead over the Detroit Tigers, who were beaten at Chicago, but it did take from Pitcher Mel Harder what nominally would have been an easy triumph.

Harder Cracks Up

George Susce, Browns' catcher, was the man who spelled trouble for Harder. The Cleveland right-hander was breezing along in fine fettle when he suddenly lost control in the fourth inning.

He filled the bases with walks to Harlond Cliff, Roy Cullenbine and Johnny Berardino, and then hit Susce to force Clift across with the first run.

Cleveland tied the count in the last half when Outfielder Roy Weatherly drove out his seventh homer of the season. But Susce wasn't done. Clift singled in the eighth, advanced on an infield out and dashed home on Susce's single with what proved the winning run.

It was only the fourth victory against 11 defeats this year for Niggeling, who was picked up by the Cincinnati Reds in the stretch of their pennant drive last year, but who didn't prove effective enough to keep. So the Browns, who can always use another pitcher, picked him up.

The result was the ninth setback for Harder, who has won seven, and it squared the series at a game apiece with a double-header left tomorrow. Harder gave up six hits in eight innings before retiring for a pinch-hitter, and successor Harry Eisenstat allowed one in the ninth.

Outfielder Ben Chapman played the full game despite an ailing knee. An X-ray examination showed a bone splinter and his physician advised him to stay out of the line-up for about ten days, but Chapman declined.

Frank Parker, McNeill Win Net Doubles

By the Associated Press

Newport, R. I., Aug. 17.—Frank Parker, of Berkeley, Calif., and Don McNeill, of Oklahoma City, the United States tennis doubles champions, added the twenty-fourth annual Newport Casino doubles title to their list today, defeating Charles Matman and Robert Harman, of Los Angeles, 9—7, 6—1, 7—5.

Earlier in the day McNeill had captured the tournment singles crown when he displayed complete mastery over Frank Kovacs, of Oakland, Calif., to win 9—7, 6—2, and 6—4.

Parker and McNeill were top-seeded in the doubles play while their final opponents were seeded fourth.

Both pairs seemed somewhat off color in the closing match, apparently due to the gruelling week of tennis they were completing. Matman and Harman were sadly lacking in control and this fault, more than anything else, enabled the victors to score repeatedly.

D. C. Sergt. Jasper Nines Beaten, 7-0, In Legion Play

Wilson, N. C., Aug. 17 (AP).—Charlie Plitt handcuffed the Washington Sergeant Jaspers tonight and the Baltimore (Md.) Customs House moved into the finals of the regional American Legion juniors. The final count was 7-0.

Albemarle, N. C., and Norfolk, Va., were set to go in the second game of tonight's double-header.

Baltimore will play the winner of the Albemarle-Norfolk game for the title Monday.

Alice Marble Takes Fourth Essex Net Title

By the Associated Press

Manchester, Mass., Aug. 17.—Alice Marble, 26, of Beverly Hills, Calif., continued her reign as world queen of women's tennis, winning her fourth Essex County tournament championship today by defeating unseeded Pauline Betz, also of Beverly Hills, 6—2, 6—2. The triumph was Miss Marble's third in succession at Essex and her twenty-sixth consecutive singles tournament triumph since she last lost a match in May, 1938.

Miss Betz, winner of more sets from Miss Marble within the past year than any other players, was under world champion pressure from the start.

She won only 16 points in the first set against Miss Marble's 33, and was treated to the assortment of man-speed serves, deep baseline volleys, killing placements and tricky backspin floaters that have carried Miss Marble to every major championship in the world.

After the match Miss Betz offered explanation for her defeat: "She's too tough."

After a short rest Miss Marble returned to attempt another sweep of silverware, pairing with Sarah Palfrey, of Reno, Nev., in the women's doubles final against the British Wightman Cup tandem of Mary Hardwick and Valerie Scott.

3-Team Twin Bill Slated Here Today

A three-team double-header in the Negro National Baseball League will be the feature at Griffith Stadium today, starting at 2 p. m. The Philadelphia Stars will meet the New York Eagles in the opener, and the winner will take place on the Washington Homestead Grays in the nightcap. Josh Gibson, ace catcher, will be with the local nine for the first time in several weeks, following a tour of Venezuela.

Harridge Lists Schedule Changes

D. C. Typos Take 4th Straight U. S. Title, 5-1, Over Boston

Mosedale Wins Final Game Easily

Herrmann Trophy Retained by Local Delegation in Meet At Cincinnati

By the Associated Press

Cincinnati, Aug. 17.—The Washington Typos won their fourth consecutive Union Printers' International Baseball Championship today, downing Boston, 5 to 1, behind the sterling pitching of "Iron Man" Mosedale.

Mosedale, who is pushing 40, but played in almost every game this week in some position, gave the Boston batters little they could do anything with. The infield made 21 assists and only three of Boston's 27 outs were on flies to the outer garden. Boston got nine hits, none for extra bases and almost all were well separated.

Washington scored two in the fourth on singles by Boundford and Gartland, a fielders' choice, and Wimple's long single.

Holloran opened the fifth for the winners with a single. Hofberg was safe on Olson's fumble; the next two men went out, but Holbrook singled, scoring the runners. Then he stole second and scored on Waple's safety.

Two singles and two infield outs gave Boston its lone run in the sixth.

Washington thus retains the Garry Herrmann Perpetual Trophy, named for the late president of the Cincinnati Reds. The winning players received individual gold medals from the National League, while the Bostonians were given medals by the American League.

World Series Fever Hits Cleveland Indians

President Alva Bradley, Cautious Man, Says Team Has Chance; Front Office Busy Opening Requests for Series Tickets

By the Associated Press

Cleveland, Aug. 17.—You couldn't blame Alva Bradley for having that gleam in his eye today.

After all, the Cleveland Indians' white-haired president is a business man. He knows there are 80,000 seats in Cleveland's Municipal Stadium, and that the Tribe has a serious case of pennant and World Series fever.

Four clerks were busy opening requests for World Series tickets as Bradley, whose personal business is real estate, dropped into the Indians' front office to keep an eye on things.

Bradley noticed the quartet. He caluculated, too, that 2,000 letter-writers already had tried to buy World Series tickets—most of them in the last week when the Clevelands pushed ahead of Detroit's Tigers.

But Bradley still is a cautious man. He exuded no optimism, only this:

"We've got a chance now. If these fellows just believe in themselves they can do it. That's all they need."

Bradley said the letter-writers were receiving numbers. Ticket requests for the series, if there is one here, will be filled in order after "we take care of the 3,000 people who are with us all the time—rain or shine."

Bradley rates as something of a diplomat. He smoothed, at least outwardly, a player rebellion which flared a couple of months ago against Manager Oscar Vitt. The players rescinded their demand that Vitt be fired because he was making them "jittery."

As Bradley marched out of the office, one of the letter-opening underlings said he, at least, was certain the pennant is in the bag. He had just found, among orders from such far-away States as Florida, a reservation from a Detroit fan.

FalteringBluesBow To Indians, 3 to 2

Indianapolis, Aug. 17 (AP).—Lefty Bob Logan hung up his sixteenth victory of the season tonight as the Indianapolis Indians slapped down the faltering Kansas City Blues, 3 to 2, in an American Association baseball game.

The league-leading Blues tallied twice in the first frame on a double, a brace of singles and Logan's wild pitch. Thereafter the Indian hurler handcuffed them.

Wayne Blackburn, Tribe third sacker, banged out his second triple to start the Indianapolis half of the sixth inning and came home with the winning run when First Baseman Prichard flied out to centerfield.

The loss was the ninth consecutive setback for the Blues.

Police Softball Team Accepts Bid of Firemen

Frank Watt Organizes Ten to Beat City Rivals at Field Day

The challenge issued a few months ago by the Fire Department softball team yesterday was accepted by the Police, and the game will be played as a feature of the morning activities of the benefit field day on Saturday, September 14, at Griffith Stadium.

Lieut. John J. Agnew and his Police-Firemen's athletic cochairman, George Hickey, announced the softball game for 11:30. The field day's afternoon events will begin at 1 o'clock.

Despite the fact that the Firemen have some 15 games to their credit this season, and the Police are not properly attuned to the occasion, Frankie Watt, former big league pitcher with the Philadelphia Athletics, said the Bluecoats would be ready and "would beat the 'stuffins' out of the Firemen."

Watt, attached to Seventh Precinct, was appointed manager-coach-captain of the team, and went into action at once to rig up a strong team. Softball games among the precincts are being played daily, and Watt's task is to consolidate the best players.

Watt said he would conscript for a strong post on the police ten none other than Buckey Buscher, former University of Maryland athlete. Buscher is said to be some shucks as a softballer, and capable of playing any position.

"Sonny" Burdine, well-known softball player, is heading the firemen.

The money from the field day will be turned over the relief funds of the police and firemen. The campaign goal is $75,000.

Toast of the Sandlots . . .

By Bill Burnett

Out at Turkey Thicket, where there is a Grady Boys baseball team for kids of every age, a youngster jumps from the peewee nine to the insect nine only because he deserves it. Jimmy Dunham is a good example.

Having played second base almost since he could lift a glove, Jimmy is a veteran at the ripe old age of 15. He has been with the Grady insect-sized club for two years, has been largely instrumental in the Grady nine's spectacular string of victories this year.

So far the team has lost only six of its 51 starts, a record in anybody's book.

Jimmy will go to Tech, as soon as he finishes at Langley Junior High. Son of a storekeeper, the only other ball-playing member of his family was his brother, Warren, who also performed at Turkey Thicket.

Though a spark plug of his team, Jimmy is no slugger. He isn't even one of the best batsmen in the line-up. But if anyone doubts his fielding ability, his deadly throwing arm and his brain work on the field, he should talk to Jimmy's manager, who lets it go with—"He's a darn good

Nats Lose Battle Of Home Runs; Foxx Hits 32d of Year

18 hits—15 of 'em off Leonard before he was lifted for a pinch hitter in the eighth. The Nats got almost maximum production out of their 11 hits off Terry and Jim Bagby, who pitched the last two innings.

It wasn't Cecil Travis' fault that the Nats were licked. Travis hoisted his first homer of the year far into the rightfield bullpen—410 feet distant—to set Leonard up in a three-run lead in the first inning. On base at the time were Buddy Lewis, who walked, and Gee Walker who had bashed a single to left.

The Red Sox bounced right back with two runs. Cramer doubled off the wall in left and Jimmy Foxx—remember him?—just sort of nudged the ball across the street behind the leftfield wall. They tied the score at 3-3 in the second when Cramer hit another double—this time to the centerfield wall—after Leonard had issued one of his six passes.

Terry, starting his first big league game since being called up from Louisville, settled down and pitched hitless ball through the second, third and fourth, but the Red Sox weren't idle. They cuffed Leonard for two runs in the third. Ted Williams doubled to right, Lou Finney singled to right, Jim Tabor doubled to left, and presto—the score was 5-3.

All of a sudden in the fifth the Nats tied the score with two out. Buddy Lewis lined a homer into the rightfield bullpen and Gee Walker doubled to left. Travis drove in his fourth run of the game with a double to the left center wall.

In the sixth, the Nats moved in front, 6-5, after two were out. Ferrell drew a walk and Leonard moved him to third with a single to left center. George Case got the run home with a perfect squeeze bunt, and was Third Baseman Tabor surprised. Ferrell scored from third and Case beat the throw to first. Dom DiMaggio called a halt at this point with a shoestring catch of Lewis' line drive.

Cronin Hits Homer

Leonard seemingly had reformed by pitching three scoreless innings, but eventually came the seventh. It was awful. Cronin tied the score at 6-6 with a homer over the leftfield fence. Jimmy Pofahl made two sensational plays at shortstop to keep a couple of other Red Sox off the bases, but Leonard walked Doerr. Then there was heck to pay. DiMaggio homered, Cramer singled, Foxx walked, and Williams scored the fourth and fifth runs of the inning with a triple over Case's head.

Even with a 10-6 deficit, the Nats battled back in the eighth and had the tying run on base with none out. West walked and when Pofahl singled to left, Terry went out and Bagby came in. Ferrell greeted him with a double that scored West. Jake Early batted for Leonard, and singled to left, scoring Pofahl. Case popped up, Ferrell scored, while Lewis was grounding out to Finney, Walker drew a walk, and Travis grounded out to Finney.

As a precautionary measure, the Red Sox knocked Carrasquel loose from three runs in the eighth with the help of doubles by Bagby and DiMaggio, and then Bagby went back to the mound and the Nats couldn't get to first base.

Ex-Minor League Pitcher Dead

Tulsa, Aug. 17 (AP).—Joseph R. (Buck) Friel, 55, former International League pitcher who later was business manager of the Tulsa baseball club of the Western League, died today.

Friel pitched for Syracuse and other International League clubs. He came here in 1924.

The body probably will be taken to Renovo, Pa., the family home.

Chisox Grab Early Lead, Defeat Tigers

Score Four Runs In First Inning And Win, 9 to 5

By the Associated Press

Detroit, Aug. 17.—The Chicago White Sox, opening with a four-run blast in the first inning, held the lead and subdued the Detroit Tigers, 9 to 5, today.

The Sox touched three Tiger pitchers for 15 hits, including Joe Kuhel's bases-loaded three-bagger in the sixth.

Paul Trout, starting for Detroit, went to the showers after pitching to six batters, five of whom hit safely. Freddy Hutchinson took over, and the Sox scored four runs off him and one off Tom Seats, who pitched the last two innings.

Jack Knott held the Tigers to three runs for eight innings but two hits and a couple of outfield errors in the ninth brought in Clint Brown to retire the side.

Cecil Travis was the guy yesterday.

To Travis, six points, because he drove in three runs with his first-inning homer, and drove in another with his fifth-inning single.

To Gee Walker, three points, because he singled, doubled and scored two runs.

To Buddy Lewis, three points, because he figured in two runs and hit the ball hard all day.

To Jimmy Pofahl, three points, because he made an important single and played a sensational game around second base.

To Rick Ferrell, three points, because his eighth-inning double figured in three runs.

To Jake Early, three points, because he singled as a pinch-hitter in the eighth, to put the tying run on base. The totals:

Sidney Hudson	43	Sam West	14
Ken Chase	40	Jack Early	13
Cecil Travis	37	Dutch Leonard	8

Klein, Miller Nines to Meet In 'A' Feature

Important games, each with a bearing on the title, will be staged in all three divisions of the National City League today.

In A Section, Klein Tavern, which earned a tie with Miller Furniture and J. C. Flood when one of its opponents used an ineligible man, faces the Furniture club in the feature. The game will be on the South Ellipse at 3 p. m. At the same time Flood meets D. G. S. on the East Ellipse and Orange Disc engages Marvins Credit on the West Ellipse.

The only battle in Section B will be a replay of a tie game between St. Francis and Plaza Tile on the South Ellipse at 11 a. m.

Kneesi Cubs' hold on the junior section leadership will be put to the test by Naimen Photo on the South Ellipse at 1. p. m. Joe Wells, former Wilson High star, will hurl for the leaders and Bill Fisher of Central for Naiman.

In other games Cardinal A. C. meets Ulins on the East Ellipse; Police Boys Club meets Friendship on the West and Boys Club of Washington meets Woodridge on the North Ellipse.

Ernie Horne Leads Hitters In Piedmont

By the Associated Press

Richmond, Va., Aug. 17.—He just lays back on those oars and watches the league go by—but he's still out in front in the batting averages.

Who? Why Ernie Horne, Richmond's third baseman. Still out of action this week, his .349 still was good enough to top the batters of the Piedmont League. He was hit by a pitched ball July 17, and hadn't played through August 14, Howe News Bureau averages showed.

Buster Maynard, of Richmond, with .347, wound up the week in second place and although he connected with no homers, his 25 for the season still led the circuit. He is tied with a teammate, Bill Prout, for the total base lead 254. Prout was third in batting with .343. Joe Bestudik, of Durham, with .332 was fourth and John Pesky, of Rocky Mount, fifth with .326. Peaky also had most hits, 160.

Red Schuerbaum, of Asheville topped the circuit in runs batted in with an even 90 while Larry Kinzer, Richmond shortstop, led in runs scored with 103. Amil Brinsky, of Winston-Salem and Sammy Gentile, of Rocky Mount tied in doubles with 29.

Kenneth Burkehard, of Asheville lost to Charlotte on August 8 but came back with a seven-inning two-hit shutout against Durham four days later to retain his pitching lead with 16 wins and 5 defeats. Mike Roscoe, of Winston-Salem was close with 13-5.

Lynn Watkins, of Richmond has won most games, 18, and lost 9.

Higbe Slated To Be Traded By Next Season

Dodgers or Giants May Get Phillies' Hurler, He Says

New York, Aug. 17 (INS).—If Walter Kirby Higbe, one of the five live ones in the Philadelphia Phillies' boneyard, should proped baseballs for Brooklyn or the Giants next season, please do not be even a little bit astonished.

For 24-year-old Kirby himself, a southern accent out of Columbia, S. C., decidedly would not gape in sheer unbelief on hearing that he has been ticketed to one of New York's two National League entries.

"I think maybe I'll be traded this winter, probably to the Dodgers or the Giants," drawled Higbe who has won 9 and lost 14 with a basement bunch and gained recognition as one of the top tossers in the loop. Seven of his losses, incidentally, were by a single run, something which would not have occurred had the Phils been more potent at the plate.

Dodgers Wanted Him

"I understand that the Dodgers tried to get me this season and offered $65,000 and two players," he revealed. "I don't know why it didn't go through, except perhaps that Manager Doc Prothro was anxious to build a winning ball club. We haven't had much luck, though. Give us two hitters with real punch and we might have gone somewhere.

"With most any other club I guess I would've been a 20-game winner. I expect I'll win about 14 or 15 before this year's over. Sure, sometimes it gets discouraging for a fellow when he knows that no matter how hard he tries, his team isn't going anywhere. But Prothro's the swellest guy I ever worked for and that helps. Anyway, I love to play baseball, maybe if nobody had wanted to pay me, I'd have played it for nothing."

However, it's quite as easy to love baseball with a contender as with a tail-ender. Higbe, who pulls down a stipend of $8,000 with the Phillies, figures he would have raked in about $14,000 performing similar feats for a more highly regarded club.

"But I'm not doing bad for a fellow playing his second full season of major league ball," he smiled. "I was glad Chicago traded me to the Phillies. With the Cubs in 1939, I pitched 23 scoreless innings of relief. But I only got a chance to start twice. I like to work and the switch to Philadelphia gave me an opportunity to show what I could do."

Higbe banks mainly on a hopping fast ball. He insists a portion of his efficiency is derived from the fact that he never shaves on the day he is to pitch, but we doubt it.

Notes on the Nats . . .

Boston, Aug. 17.—Earl Johnson, the rookie southpaw from the Piedmont League, who shut out the Nats, 3-0, in Washington last week, will go to the mound tomorrow when the Red Sox will try for a sweep of the three-game series.

Ken Chase will be the Nats' pitcher. He will be seeking his eleventh win of the year. With Chase complaining of a severe head cold, there may be a last-minute change, which would send Rene Monteagudo back to the mound in the series.

Buddy Myer was out of the Nats' line-up today with a cold. . . . Joe Cronin's seventh-inning homer was his nineteenth of the season and tied the high mark of 19 which he set for himself last year. . . . After hitting his first-inning homer, Jimmy Foxx had a chance today to equal Babe Ruth's record of seven home runs in five consecutive games, but the best he could produce thereafter was a double. . . . The only Red Sox who didn't get a hit off Leonard today was Bobby Doerr, whom Leonard walked four times and retired once on a line drive to Travis. . . . Benny Steiner, the former Central High School shortstop, has been working out here with the Red Sox. . . . Scout Billy Evans brought him from Washington, where he signed a Boston contract. . . . The Nats have won two and lost four on their Eastern swing.—POVICH.

Three Redskins Are Injured During Intra-Squad Battle

Vince Farrar, Two Rookies Banged Up

Stitches Are Required To Heal Wounds; Flaherty Displeased With Team's Showing

By a Staff Correspondent

Spokane, Wash., Aug. 17.—The Redskins today staged a two-hour preview of their coming East-West feud—a preview that left three of their number in stitches.

Coach Ray Flaherty's East eleven took on Turk Edwards' West Coast Redskins, and when it was all over Chuck Slagle, rookie guard from North Carolina, went to the doctor to have three stitches in his lip; Vince Farrar, blocking halfback purchased from the Pittsburgh Steelers, had to have three stitches in his nose, and Bob Fisher, rookie tackle from Southern California, had a badly gashed left eyelid that had to have two stitches.

Again it was Ray Hare, the pile-driving halfback from Gonzaga University, who was the main source of the day's casualties.

On the first play Farrar's nose was split open as he attempted to tackle Hare as the Gonzaga boy skirted his own left end. A few moments later Hare was leading a play off tackle and ran into Slagle. Fisher was cut by a flying foot as he attempted a tackle.

Flaherty was sorely vexed with today's spectacle. The backfield men were confusing signals all afternoon, slow getting down the field for passes and sluggish on defense.

Hare's blocking and Dick Farman's great defensive work at tackle were the only items that drew favorable comment from the Redskin coach.

"I didn't like today's work at all," Flaherty said. "These backs should know the signals by now. It looks as though we have a tough time ahead of us and a lot more work ironing out the rough spots."

The Redskins will scrimmage again on Monday, and Frank Filchock, the 'Skins' lone holdout who is to join the club here tomorrow morning, may see action on his first day in camp.

Redskin Rookies Pack the Poundage

Soph Linemen At N.C. Promise Big Things

Guards, Tackles Look Good in Drills; Hodges Presses Jim Mallory

Special Dispatch to The Post

Chapel Hill, N. C., Aug. 17.—If the sophomores keep up the pace set in off-season drills, the University of North Carolina may have a stronger line than last year.

One of the crying needs at North Carolina for the last two years has been for more guards and tackles. The first-stringers did pretty well, but the reserves were lacking both in quality and quantity.

Of course one cannot expect the upcoming sophomores to perform like veterans but they did well enough in spring practice to make the veterans realize they would have to step lively to hold their jobs.

Mallory Extended

Howard Hodges, Greenville, N. C., boy and a 175-pound end, waged a hard battle with Jim Mallory, who has since signd a baseball contract with the Senators, at the right terminal last winter and showed he would be ready for considerable action this fall. John Miller, Everett Briggs and Emanuel Rivkin also looked good in spots.

Confronted with a shortage of tackles for the last three seasons, the Tar Heels may see this problem partially solved this fall in the presence of Sophomores Roy Snyder, Bob Heymann, Jack Johnston and Alfred Marshall. The four performed well and, if they can keep up the pace set in winter drills, Veterans Gates Kimball and Dick White will each have two fine replacements.

Best of the new material at guard are Joe Wolf, Sid Heimovitch and Alfred Marshall. Wolf and Heimovitch are both strong on defense while Marshall is fast and has an ideal football physique. Marshall and Heimovitch will understudy Letterman Bill Faircloth and Wolf will be the No. 1 replacement for Gwynn Nowell, another letterman.

Dave Barksdale, a converted back, got onto his new duties at center and looked good backing up the line. Wray Lewis, a transfer, may develop but lacks experience.

Backs Lack Promise

The sophomore backfield prospects are not up to the standard of the linemen in number and in material although there are several promising candidates.

The best sophomore backs include Johnny Pecora, quarterback; Bill Sigler, Joe Austin, Al Remy and Ralph Burkley, halfbacks, and Mike Cooke and Dillard Bulluck, fullbacks.

A triple-threater, Pecora is fast and elusive and a fine passer. He and Reserve Frank O'Hare will assist the versatile Jim Lalanne.

Remy and Austin, who were quarterbacks last fall, both handled new assignments at halfback well last spring and showed improvement in blocking. Sigler's forte is his punting. Burkley is light but is fast and aggressive.

Cooke packs tramendous power in his line smashes and can also punt well. Bulluck is light but learns quickly and works hard.

Among other sophomores who will be competing for berths on the first and second elevens are Toby Webb, end; L. C. Harrell, tackle; Bob Whitten and Page Graham, guards; Lem Gibbons, quarterback, and L. M. Levine, halfback.

Two Redskin Squads Selected for Game

Flaherty, Edwards Head Teams in Charity Battle Thursday in Seattle; Skins' Coach to Bring Out Rookies in First Contest

By Al Hailey
A Staff Correspondent

Spokane, Wash., Aug. 17.—Line-ups for two of the toughest games on the Redskins' 1940 program—the two games with some more Redskins—were completed today as Coach Ray Flaherty prepared to put to the test his 1940 theme of more beef in the backfield.

If the crop of rookie ball carriers lives up to expectations the Redskins will have the heaviest backfield the club has ever had, Flaherty announced happily today as he picked himself an "East" team, called the remainder the "West" team and turned it over to Line Coach and Capt. Turk Edwards.

Of the 14 rookies in camp, nine are on the "West" eleven, or Pacific Coast Stars; five are on the "East" team and only two are in the starting line-up—Steve Andrako, draftee center from Ohio State, and Bob Seymour, Oklahoma halfback star of 1939.

"Real" Redskin Squad

Here's how Flaherty's handpicked team he's calling the "real Redskins" lines up:

Wayne Millner and Johnny Spirida, ends; Wee Willie Wilkin and Bo Russell, tackles; Clem Stralka and Clyde Shugart, guards; Steve Andrako, rookie, center; Jimmy German, quarterback; Jay Turner and Don Irwin, halfbacks, and Rookie Bob Seymour, fullback.

The East's reserves are Bob Masterson and Rookie Bolo Perdue, of Duke, ends; Mickey Parks, center; Chuck Slagle, rookie from North Carolina, guard; Bill Young, tackle; Dick Todd and Frank Filchock, quarterbacks, and Vince Farrar, newly acquired from the Pittsburgh National League Club; Wilbur Moore, Andy Farkas and Jim Meade, halfbacks.

Turk Edwards' Pacific Coast Stars will line up this way:

Bob McChesney and Charley Malone, ends; Turk Edwards and Jim Barber, tackles; Dick Farman and Steve Slivinski, guards; Vic Carroll, center; Sammy Baugh, quarterback; Ernie Pinckert and Jimmy Johnston, halfbacks, and Maxie Krause, fullback.

The West's reserves have Rookies Gene Blackwell and Sandy Sanford, both of the University of Alabama, at ends; Bob Fisher, from the Los Angeles Bulldogs, at tackle; Johnny Thomassin, draftee from Southern California, converted from a tackle into a guard; Bob Titchenal, of San Jose State, and Frank Kiss, South Carolina protege of Andy Farkas, at center. In the backfield are Roy Zimmerman, of San Jose State, quarterback, and Boyd Morgan, Ray Hare, Ernie Lain and Ed Justice, halfbacks.

The East and West elevens clash for the first time in a full length game Thursday in Seattle in a charity game, and they return to Spokane Friday to start work for their second intrasquad battle on August 28 for the Spokane athletic round table. Both will be night games.

Rivalry Secondary

While there is keen rivalry between the two elevens, Flaherty will be concentrating his attention on the crop of rookies.

"We have the heaviest and speediest backfield in our history out here now and believe me those rookies are going to see plenty of action," Flaherty said today.

The beef department consists mainly of Bob Seymour, 200; Roy Zimmerman, 205; Ernie Lain, 230; Ray Hare, 205; Vince Farrar, 205, and Bob Hoffman, draftee from Southern California, 205. Not a veteran back on the squad can touch the 200 mark, with the exception of Jay Turner, 205, and Max Krause, who is not to see much action, at 202.

From end to end, Edwards' West stars outweigh Flaherty's men, but in the backfield, Flaherty has the power, speed and reserve strength.

50 Candidates At Va. Invited For Grid Drills

21 Lettermen Included In Call for Practice At Woodberry Forest

Special Dispatch to The Post

Charlottesville, Va., Aug. 17.—Exactly 50 candidates for the University of Virginia's football squad were issued invitations today to report to the preliminary practice headquarters at Woodberry Forest on September 2.

The call went to 21 lettermen and several nonletter reserves of the 1939 squad and members of the new sophomore class. With veterans and freshman stars of last year swarming back for every position, Coach Frank Murray and his staff expect heavy competition for first team ratings to carry well past the opening game with Lehigh here September 28.

The Cavaliers will put in ten days of daily double workouts at Woodberry, where they will find facilities to match their own here at the university. The squad list:

Backs—Wallace Andrew, Altavista; Moody Cardoso, Richmond; Ross Craig, Dundas, Ontario; George Creighton, Maynard, Mass.; Francis Crenshaw, Washington; William Crumm, Scarsdale, N. Y.; William Dudley, Bluefield; Trumbull Ollcitte, Courtland; Howard Goodwin, Williamsburg; Edward Lyman, Arlington; Harry McClaugherty, Narrows; John Marshall, Birmingham, Ala.; John Neff, Charlottesville; Leroy Neustedter, Milwaukee, Wis.; Don Niklason, Arlington; Harold O'Connell, Dongan Hills, N. Y.; Sylvester O'Grace, Auroro, Minn.; Edward Robeson, Newport News; Craig Smith, New York; Benton Stevens, Falmouth, Mass., and George West, Camden, S. C.

Guards—Russell Carneal, Fredericksburg; Ervin Dickey, Watertown, N. Y.; Irwin Lakin, Brookline, Mass.; Phillip Rothar, Miami, Fla.; John Sauerbeck, Danville; Nicholas Schlegel, Washington, and John Waldrop, Roanoke.

Centers—Andrew Christian, Richmond; Jack Murden, Norfolk; George Palmer, Charlottesville; William Suhling, Lynchburg, and Roscoe Willett, Louisville, Ky.

On the Line

—With CONSIDINE

New York, Aug. 17.—Barring an unexpected change in plans, Joe Louis will tour Central and South America this winter and will not make another defense of his title until next June.

The champion's handlers realize finally that, in Joe's curious case, honesty has not exactly been the best policy. By belting out everything in sight, either on the first or second attempt, Louis has worked himself out of work. He is a living contradiction of the old axiom about the awards going to the hard-working young man. For he has worked hard and often, but in doing so he exhausted his means of income, to wit, challengers.

CONSIDINE

This year, in his prime, he will make less money than he has made during any year since bursting into view in 1935. His three fights, two against Arturo Godoy and one against Johnny Paychek, brought him $108,689. That is, that was what the papers called his share. His actual share was about one quarter of that sum, for, first off, his managers take 50 per cent of his purses, and other duns, including taxes, take another 25 per cent. If he managed to get $30,000 of the money he was pictured as receiving the day after his fights, he was lucky.

Julian Black, one of his leading managers, called on Mike Jacobs the other day and said, "we've got to get new challengers. The size of Joe's last few 'gates' shows that people just won't patronize a Louis fight when Joe's fighting old guys or phoney challengers. Why don't you concentrate on building up Conn or Comiskey or one of those young ones."

Mike then asked him what Louis would do for a living in the meantime, inasmuch as the stage and radio were not logical outlets and in view of the fact that Joe won't indorse any commercial products unless he actually uses them.

"We can make from five to ten thousand a week, traveling in Central and South America," Black told the promoter. "We've been turning down offers for years, for exhibition work down there. But now's the time to go. It'll keep Joe in shape, and give the people a chance to miss him. And give you time to develope Conn and Comiskey."

Jacobs hopes to get one more outdoor fight out of Louis this year, and has been mumbling something about October. But it is extremely unlikely that this will come off. After a brief renewal of interest, the proposed Louis-Max Baer fight has died for keeps.

If Conn beats Pastor early next month it would give him very little time in which to prepare for an outdoor shot at Louis—and Jacobs would never put that one indoors. Mike has been a latter-day genius at unearthing Louis-fodder. He sent to Spain for Uzcudun, to Germany for Schmeling, to Wales for Farr and to Chile for Godoy, when Louis exhausted homegrown challengers. But the import business is finished. The immediate hopes of the heavyweight division are Conn (who might gain enough weight over the winter and become less of a risk against Louis) and Comiskey (who might learn how to harness his great natural gifts by next June or September.) If Pastor licks Conn, of course, that eliminates Billy as a reputable threat, without necessarily restoring Bob as one.

Louis would take his own sparring mates along if he made the trip below the border, though along the route there might be some action against hand-picked natives. We think the tour would be a good stunt. No heavyweight champion ever appeared in South America. Jack Dempsey, as former champ, made a terrific hit in Venezuela as a referee. But the real good that would come of Louis' "sabbatical year" would be the resuscitation of the heavyweight division which he has ruined by his sheer superiority.

It doesn't make sense that a fighter who drew two $1,000,000 gates on the way to his present eminence should now have trouble drawing one-tenth that amount. He has been cheapened by necessarily cheap opponents. The vicariousness of managers who thrust their still-green boys in there against him, has played its part in the strange decomposition of Louis as a drawing card. There just aren't enough heavyweights around to permit Louis to perform in four fights a season, and, just now, there aren't even enough of them around to meet Louis on his reduced schedule of two fights a year.

The division needs a breathing spell to reclaim and rebuild the havoc wrought by the first heavyweight champion who wasn't lying when he promised to be "a fighting champion."

All-Stars Drill With Emphasis On Air Attacks

By the Associated Press

Evanston, Ill., Aug. 17.—Here's a tip to the Green Bay Packers:

Polish up your pass defense for the game with the college All-Stars in Soldier Field August 29.

The All-Stars completed their first week of practice today with emphasis still on aerials, forwards and laterals.

Head Coach Eddie Anderson, of Iowa, told his 69 stars at the start that "we have only one purpose here, and that's to beat the Packers. If the Packers score 15 touchdowns, then it's up to us to score 16."

He has been directing drills along those lines all week.

Anderson has an abundance of fine passers, includig the star of his own 1939 eleven, Nile Kinnick; Ambrose Schindler, Southern California; Bob Kellogg, Tulane; George Cafego, Tennessee, and Kenny Washington, U. C. L. A. The All-Stars also have been stressing speed in the running attack with such headliners as Clemson's Banks McFadden, Notre Dame's Steve Sitko and Ben Sheridan, and Minnesota's Harold Van Every carryig the brunt of this type of work.

Both the Packers, who are drilling at their home stadium, and the All-Stars plan several scrimmages next week. The Collegians will hold only one session tomorrow instead of two, which will permit the squad to attend the Chicago Cubs and Pittsburgh Pirates baseball game.

Rockingham Feature Won By Sassy Lady

Favorite Doubt Not Runs Second, Halcyon Boy, Third, in Purse

By the Associated Press

Salem, N. H., Aug. 17.—Closing with a rush in the stretch, Walter J. McCune's Sassy Lady defeated the highly favored Doubt Not today at Rockingham Park in the inaugural running of the raceland handicap over the three-quarter mile sprint distance.

The time was 1:11 4-5, the second fastest six furlongs of the Rockingham meeting.

After exchanging the pace with B. N. Kane's Halcyon Boy in the early stages of the race, Sassy Lady moved to a slim lead going around the turn. But Doubt Not, a 4-to-5 choice in the betting to capture his fourth straight dash of the New England season, saved ground on the rail and burst to the front going down the home stretch.

Ted Atkinson applied the whip to Sassy Lady, however, and the 4-year-old filly turned on the heat again to lead the favored gray horse to the wire by three quarters of a length. Halcyon Boy also closed fast and almost beat Doubt Not out of second place. J. Yancey Christmas's 3-year-old, Rough Pass, was fourth, a length behind the leaders.

John R. Macomber, one of the fathers of thoroughbred racing in New England, for whose estate in Framingham, Mass., the handicap is named, presented the trophy to the winner.

Sassy Lad paid $8.60, $3.20 and $2.60 and Doubt Not returned $2.60 and $2.40. Halcyon Boy paid $3. The net value of the purse to the winner was $3,460.

100,000 Expected To See Charlotte Nine Play—FREE

Charlotte, N. C., Aug. 17 (AP).—Norfolk and Charlotte, Piedmont League baseball clubs, will give a free performance "on the house" tomorrow afternoon, starting at 3 p. m.

Charlotte bans Sunday baseball, but the clubs are behind schedule as a result of their double-header being rained out tonight, so there'll be a ball game Sunday afternoon for everybody who can pack into the park.

8 Polo Clubs Go After U. S. Title

Cleveland, Aug. 17 (AP).—Eight of the Nation's top polo teams assembled here today and made ready to go after the National Intercircuit and 12-goal championships next week.

In a preliminary match, the Cleveland Halfred Farms riders defeated the former champion Pegasus Club of New Jersey, 14 to 13. Clarence Coombs, the Pegasus' six-goal handicapper, led the scoring with six goals.

Tournament play opens tomorrow with the 7-11 Ranchers from Chicago, opposing the Fairfield Polo Club, of Wichita, Kans.

Va. Sox Face Merchants

The Virginia White Sox have a double-header scheduled today with the Brookland Merchants on the Bailey Crossroad Diamond, starting at 1:30.

WhiteHouse Pistol Squad Ties Record

Copyright International News Service

Teaneck, N. J., Aug. 17.—First honors for the ninth annual international police pistol tournament here, were captured during a heavy rain this afternoon by the White House police, 1940 champions in the police division who shot 1,196 out of a possible 1,200, equalling the range record set four years ago by the Delaware and Hudson railroad police.

John J. Cash, best marksman of the guardians of the President, shot an almost perfect 300 out of a possible 300 in the team competition putting 29 shots in the exact center of the bulls-eye.

He dropped 1-point in the individual shooting, with 290.

Argyle Golfers Begin Annual Clash for Club Championship

National Archery Champ Rings the Bell at Any Distance in Monument Grounds Exhibition

Post Staff Photos—Schlossenberg

Belle Haven, Capital Also Start Early

Match Play Listed For September 7-8 At Silver Spring Club; Other Golf News

By Merrell W. Whittlesey.

Argyle Club members usher in the fall feature of every golf club schedule today—the club championship—and from now through the middle of November the various club members will be busy knocking each other off for the title of "best golfer in the club."

The Silver Spring linksmen start qualifying today and the membership will be given ample time to turn in the medal rounds. The first round of match play is scheduled September 7-8.

At Washington, Burning Tree and Chevy Chase the titles are already decided. Chevy Chase has long played a midsummer medal play tournament, won this year by John Brawner, while Burning Tree members play at their own convenience, and Page Hufty won honors this year at the River road club.

Washington Golf and Country Club changed two years ago to a midsummer event and one of the most consistent shotmakers at the Virginia club, Dr. Edwin T. Rice, defeated C. H. Pardoe in the finals to end Ralph Fowler's reign as two-term titlist.

Others in August Play

Capital and Belle Haven will also make August starts in the annual club tourneys, the Capital members opening medal rounds next Sunday, while the Belle Haven qualifying starts August 31. Frank White came out on top in the scramble between White, Billy Houghton, George Molloy and Bill Pendergast last year at Capital, stopping Houghton after being top man for two years.

Belle Haven may have a new champion by default as the present titleholder, Paul Lipps, will enter the University of Virginia as a freshman next month, leaving little time for golf.

The week-end of September 7-8 will find Beaver Dam, Indian Spring and Kenwood members opening the fall funfests with qualifying rounds, with the first match play rounds at each club the following Saturday.

Joe Balestri is the present titleholder at Beaver Dam but will have plenty of competition this fall while at Indian Spring. It looks like Roger Peacock can make it two in a row if he can find time to play in the championship. Jack Keele, George Vass and a half-dozen others will be out to end Johnny Bergelin's streak at Kenwood. He's won the last two years.

Manor, Woodmont and Army and Navy will stage qualifying rounds the week of September 14-15, with match play also starting at these clubs the following week. Dick Meyer is defending champ at Manor, but Harry Pitt has won the title six times and he's always hard to beat. Howard Nordlinger, defending and nine-time champion at Woodmont, will be the favorite but the 1937 and '38 champion, Milton Harris, may have a say in the matter. Ralph Bogart has cleaned up the last two years at Army and Navy and he'll doubtless be back for a crack at three straight, in addition to being the favorite in the Congressional tourney.

Congressional's qualifying starts on a Wednseday, September 18, and continues through the week-end. Match play will follow the latter part of the month and early in October. Gene Pittman, who upset Billy Shea in the finals last year, will try to make it No. 2.

The dates haven't been set for Columbia's championship that is played on successive days, Monday through Saturday, with a big dinner the last night. E. A. Merkle was the surprise champion last year.

However, the club championships are not held just for the better golfers. The members in flights 2 through 15 probably get a lot more fun out of it than the winner.

D. C. Golfers Facing Busy Week's Schedule

Pro-Amateur, Mixed Two-Ball Events Among Many Slated; Diffenbaugh's Gang Seeks Revenge Over Shorey's Crew Today

Pro-amateur tournaments, a one-partner affair tomorrow at Lancaster, Pa., where ten local teams will pay their annual visit to Arthur Thorn and a Maryland State event Wednesday at Manor Country Club top the week's golf card.

The Maryland State mixed two-ball tournament today at Rolling Road will be mainly a Baltimore event as only three Washington entries will be accepted on the tee.

Mrs. Betty Meckley, Kenwood, and Bobby Brownell, Manor, will play at 1:42 with Elizabeth Bonthron and Jesse Dowling, jr., of Hillendale. The other District duos are Mrs. C. P. Medley, Indian Spring, and Frank Butler, Manor, with Mrs. K. S. Giles, Indian Spring, and W. A. Covert, Manor, playing at 1:36.

George Diffenbaugh and between 30 and 40 members of Kenwood will play a return visit to Indian Spring today, where they hope to avenge a defeat at the hands of Mel Shorey's crew suffered two weeks ago. The match will start around 1 p. m.

Handicap events are scheduled at most other courses today, featured by the President's Cup play at Belle Haven and a mixed Scotch foursome at Army and Navy.

Most of the local duos will leave tonight for Lancaster, where they will meet up with some of the best golfers in the East in the Invitation Pro-Amateur Tournament. Strongest of the local teams will be Leo Walper and Roger Peacock.

All-Star Match Slated

Earle Skinker will lead his all-star junior line-up against Baltimore's youngsters Wednesday morning in the annual intercity junior match at Argyle. Skinker has named the players but not decided on the line-up. Ralph Bogart, Dick Meyer, Skinker, Bill Cassedy, Buster Mrstik, Arthur Myers, James Brantley, George Vass, Frank Dunham, jr., and Freddie Bolton with Dick Burgess, Charles Price and Jack Robinson for alternates.

Wednesday afternoon one of the biggest pro-amateur fields of the season is expected to play in one of the three-in-one tournaments of the Maryland State Golf Association at Manor. Pros will be allowed three amateur partners in the main event, and the simon-pures will use half handicap allowances.

Pros in Sweepstakes

In addition, the pros will play in a sweepstakes event and the amateurs will meet in a handicap tournament. The entrance fee is $2 for each event.

Two local professionals, Lew Worsham and Gene Larkin, will be busy on the practice tee this week along with 30 or more of the four-and-under-handicapped amateurs. Worsham and Larkin will be prepping for the National P. G. A. championship that starts next Monday, August 26 at Hershey, Pa., while the amateurs will be interested in the National Amateur qualifying rounds, scheduled Tuesday, August 27 at Chevy Chase.

Father-and-son teams interested in the Maryland State championship a week from today at Elkridge have until Saturday to file their entries with the association offices at 16 McCellan place, Baltimore.

Local Colored Golf Pro to Join Joe Louis

Clyde Martin, professional at the Langston golf course here, is expected to join Heavyweight Champ Joe Louis as his golf playing partner in the near future.

Martin and Louis played together during the recent Eastern Open championship at Langston, and Louis was impressed with Martin's golf game. He is expected to make all the training camp trips.

Reds Grab Early Lead, But Rain Halts Game

St. Louis, Aug. 17 (AP).—Rain today washed out the scheduled clash between the Cardinals and Cincinnati, after the Reds had jumped off to a three-run lead, mostly on homers by Lonnie Frey and Billy Werber in the first inning.

Alice Marble, Sarah Palfrey Top Seeded

Favored in National Doubles Championship At Longwood Club

By the Associated Press

Brookline, Mass., Aug. 17.—The world champion women's double team, Alice Marble, of Beverly Hills, Calif., and Sarah Palfrey, of Reno, Nev., were seeded first today in the women's draw of the national doubles tennis championship, opening Monday at Longwood Cricket Club.

The champion pair drew Nancy Amory, of Beverly Farms, and Joan Humphrey, of Manchester, for their opponents in the first round.

Second seeded team was that of Margaret Osborn, of San Francisco, and Pauline Betz, of Beverly Hills, Calif., who was defeated today by Miss Marble for the singles championship in the Essex County Club women's invitation tourney at Manchester.

Helen Jacobs, of Berkeley, Calif., and Mary Arnold, of Los Angeles, were third seeded, and the fourth ranking went to Patricia Canning, of Los Angeles, and Virginia Wolfenden, of San Francisco.

The Osborn-Betz duo face Mrs. H. B. Wightman, of Brookline, and Mrs. Gretl Dupont in the first round. Helen and Ann Knowles, of Beverly Farms, were drawn against the third-seeded pair and the Canning-Wolfenden combination is pitted against Anne Page, of Wayne, Pa., and Freda Scharman, of New York.

40,000 Expected To Attend Negro All-Star Classic

Chicago, Aug. 17 (AP).—The annual Negro All-Star baseball game between picked squads of professional players will be played tomorrow afternoon in Comiskey Park.

A crowd of 40,000 is anticipated for the battle. The Eastern All-Stars were selected from the Negro National League and the Western All-Stars from the Negro American League.

Hilton Smith, ace of the Kansas City staff, will start on the mound for the West and Ray Brown, Pittsburgh star, has been given the starting nod for the East.

Andy Cooper, of Kansas City, is the manager of the Western nine and Felton Snow, of Baltimore, will pilot the Easterners. The West won a year ago, to take a 4-to-3 edge in the rivalry.

McNair Deadlocks For Gun Prize

A testimonial shoot for Forrest McNair, outstanding trap shooter, featured Washington Gun Club activities yesterday, and by way of showing his appreciation McNair tied for first in the 50-target event with George Bratt. Each had scores of 50x50. The handicap shoot was won by J. R. Groves, who turned in 49x50.

honors in a Red Cross benefit match two weeks from now.

Al Houghton, Beaver Dam professional, led the Washington, D. C. players with a 295 total and tied Johnny Bulla for fourteenth and fifteenth money. Houghton, whose halfway total was 152, finished with a 73 and 70, the last 36 holes in even par, for 295. His final scores were 35-38 and 36-34.

Houghton's score was 13 shots better then the 308 score of Virgi Worsham, of Chevy Chase. Worsham was 73 in the morning and 83 in the afternoon while Robert T. Barnett, of the same club, had 80-81 and a final total of 316. Bobby Cruickshank, of Richmond, had 303.

Chicagoan Wins Ohio Net Match

Milwaukee, Aug. 17 (AP).—Gardner Larned, 17-year-old Chicagoan, reached the men's singles finals in the State Open Tennis Tornament today by upsetting second-seeded Milton (Ike) Ruehl, of Milwaukee, 4—6, 6—4, 6—3, 6—1.

Larned, who won the junior crown yesterday, faces top-seeded Marv Achman, of Milwaukee, in the finals tomorrow.

Mary Steil, of Chicago, won the women's title with a 6—3, 6—4 victory over Louise Hofmeister, also of Chicago. Allice McDonald, of Chicago, and Mrs. Mercina Parker, St. Louis, annexed the doubles title by defeating the Steil-Hofmeister duo in 1—6, 7—5, 6—2 sets.

Ken Boyum, Minnapolis, was extended to three sets before he defeated Hube Schneider, of Milwaukee, 1—6, 7—5, 6—1, in the boys' finals.

Minor League Ball In Brilliant Boom

Increase of 300 Per Cent Made In Circuits; Judge Bramham Sees All From Durham

Durham, N. C., Aug. 17.—The "national passtime," baseball, was called back in the fisst quarter of the century. Hardly a city but had its ball park where the banker, the butcher and the poolroom operator gathered on summer afternoons to "root" for the home team, pound each other on the back and sometimes threaten the umpire with mayhem.

Then came the slump. By 1932 organized baseball almost had hit bottom. The two major leagues still made ends meet, but the minors were disappearing from the national scene. Only 11 remained and few of them were strong. No longer did boys collect pictures of diamond heroes and there was hardly a kid who could recite the big league batting averages. Baseball had lost the national interest.

Now look at the picture. In the last eight years the number of minor leagues has increased by 300 per cent. Last year the paid attendance of 18,500,000 was the best in baseball's history. This summer there were 44 professional minor leagues, made up of 345 clubs, in operation. The national pastime has come back into its own.

Why? There may be any number of reasons—more money, more leisure, lights for night games. But there is one fact about which these can be no doubt. The rejuvenation of baseball as the national game began the year Judge W. G. Bramham was made president of the National Association of Professional Baseball Leagues and the game has grown in popularity every year he held the reins.

Bramham himself is inclined to give credit to others, especially to Judge Kennesaw Mountain Landis, the high commissioner of baseball. But the facts don't bear him out. Landis was on the job long before Bramham. Moreover, he has complete jurisdiction over only the 16 clubs of the two major leagues. Insofar as the minors are concerned his authority is limited to "conduct detrimental to baseball," appeals by players on claims amounting to $300 or more, appeals concerning the free agency claims of players and disputes between the majors and minors. Bramham on the other hand has jurisdiction over 345 different baseball teams and their players and is charged with the duty not only of protecting them but also insisting that the public gets the kind of baseball for which it pays.

Durham is best known as a great cigarette center. Certainly tobacco is its biggest business. Nevertheless, the Durham post office's biggest customer, insofar as first class, registered, special delivery and airmail are concerned, is the National Association of Professional Baseball Leagues which Bramham brought here less than eight years ago.

"But why is Durham the headquarters?" many baseball men ask. The answer is simple. Bill Bramham declined to take the job if it necessitated him moving away. "I'm too damned old to be moving," was his gruff-voiced explanation. Since then he has disproved his own statement by traveling hundreds of miles a year by plane and train to visit baseball clubs in every State in the Union and in Canada.

As great as Bramham's success has been in promoting the "bush leagues" in the United States and Canada, he has been even more successful in his own backyard. When he took over the job there were only six professional ball clubs in North Carolina and they were staggering. Today there are 31, members of four different leagues.

Miss Decker Is Defeated At Oakland

Sara Moore Advances In Women's Doubles Of West Md. Tourney

By the Associated Press

Oakland, Md., Aug. 17.—Two unseeded players, Robert Shapiro, of Baltimore, and Arlo Klintetob, of Peeksville, Pa., fought their way into the finals of the twenty-first annual Western Maryland Tennis Tournament today, along with Joy Hartman, defending women's champion, of Pittsburgh.

Klintetob defeated Ed McCullough, of Brackenridge, Pa., 6—2, 6—3, and Shapiro downed Ed Alcorn, of Pittsburgh, seeded fifth, 8—6, 2—6, 6—4 in the semifinals.

Miss Hartman, who needs one more title to gain permanent possession of the women's singles' trophy, beat Charlotte Decker, of Washington, 6—3, 6—4. Tomorrow Miss Hartman meets Mrs. L. W. Andraide, Montauk Beach, Long Island, victor today over Dorothy Ball, Wheeling, W. Va., 6—3, 6—0.

In men's doubles, Price Colvin and D. Hobbs, of Baltimore, reached the finals by defeating Shapiro and E. E. Farber, of Baltimore, 6—2, 6—2.

Mrs. Andraide and Miss Sara Moore, of Washington, defeated Miss Hartman and Dolly Harris, of Pittsburgh, in the semifinals of the lower bracket of women's doubles, with the upper bracket match still in doubt.

Fred Jacoby, Jr., Steals Show at Solomons Island Regatta

New Jersey Pilot Scores 2,725 Points

Designer Captures Four Firsts, Three Seconds, and One Third in Events

By Anne Hagner

Solomons, Md., Aug. 17.—It was strictly an all-Jacoby day at the Solomons Island Yacht Club regatta here today as Fred Jacoby, jr., from North Bergen, N. J., scored four firsts, three seconds, and a third place to total 2,725 points with his speedy fleet of outboard motor craft.

Jacoby, designer and manufacturer of his own boats, came close to winning another event, but water in the engine of his high-bouncing little wave-hopper interfered and enabled young Bill Dyer, of Washington, to take the final heat of class F, last race on the card.

A strong east wind that haunted the committee with frequent showers early in the day kicked up enough waves in the small tributary of the Patuxent River to prove a slight menace to the racers. Whitecaps around the buoy nearest the judges' stand sent three boats splattering upside-down, but none of the drivers was hurt.

Buckman Beats Gun

The trio of unfortunates included Les Buckman, of Baldwin, N. Y., and John Thacker, of Wynwood, Pa., whose class A boats piled up almost simultaneously; and Joseph Schmutz, from Merchantsville, N. J., who ran afoul of an unexpected high wave in the midget racers' division.

Buckman sampled another dose of ill fortune when he received his first disqualification in five years of racing for beating the gun early in the program. However, he was able to defeat Jacoby in points gained in the class B division by adding up 700 tallies against Jacoby's 625.

New Jersey's string of winners included not only Jacoby, whose triumphs are an old story to regatta fans, but also the Defibaugh sisters, Betty, Irene and Frances. Frances led a strong field of masculine rivals by totaling 527 points with her midget outboard, outdistancing Dick McFayden's 526 and her sister, Betty's, 469.

Gov. O'Conor Present

The large crowd that lined Solomons' oyster-shell shoreline and dotted the inlet with pleasure craft included the Old Line State's Governor, Herbert O'Conor, whose yacht, Dupont, lay at anchor on the edge of the course most of the afternoon.

The rough going made a considerable cut in speeds for the lightweight boats and forced committee heads to reduce the length of the course. Prospects for tomorrow's sailing and inboard races are brighter, however, with a record entry list expected for the events. They commence at 10 a. m. in the Patuxent with a class for local sailboats, and continue throughout the day.

Steady Hotsy Totsy Wins Gold Cup Race

By the Associated Press

Northport, N. Y., Aug. 17.—The Gold Cup speedboat race held today in this sheltered harbor, again was a story of heartbreak and mechanical breakdowns for the contestants, and of boredom for the spectators.

For upward of four hours and over 90 miles of water the high-powered little boats churned the waves, and at the conclusion it was announced that Hotsy Totsy, a racer owned and piloted by Sidney Allen, of Hampton Bays, N. Y., had captured the cup.

Not that Hotsy Totsy was anywhere near the fastest of the six craft entered, but she came the nearest to finishing the three 30-mile heats inside the time limit, and she never did break down. With Allen, a roller-skating rink proprietor, clinging patiently to the wheel, Hotsy Totsy simply wore the others out.

By winning the first heat at an average speed of 45.454 miles an hour, and the second at 51.137, Hotsy Totsy rolled up a total of 800 points, which was sufficient even though she lagged so in the final heat that she was waved from the course by the officials.

Second place was a tie between Gray Goose 3d, owned by George Cannon, of New Rochelle, N. Y., and driven by Hugh Gingras, and Miss Syndicate, property of Horace Dodge, of Detroit, and piloted by Eddie Hudson. Each had 523 points.

Hotsy Totsy's victory was a pretty hollow one. Both My Sin, driven by Zalmon G. Simmons, jr., of Greenwich, Conn., and Notre Dame, owned by Herbert Mendelson, and piloted by Danny Arena, demonstrated in the opening heat that they could step right away from Allen's boat.

But they couldn't stand the gaff. My Sin, the defending champion, broke something in its propellor gear, after making a runaway of the opening heat for nearly 29 of the 30 miles, and dropped out. She came back to try it again in the second and third heats, but each time quit after a fancy burst of speed.

Notre Dame, second fastest in the field, also broke down in the final lap of the opening heat. Her rudder went wrong, and Arena didn't get her popping again until the last heat.

Then he tore off the 30 miles at an average pace of 66.651 miles an hour, leaving Hotsy Totsy and Miss Syndicate wallowing in his wake.

Airport Tank Squad Wins at Baltimore

Special Dispatch to The Post

Baltimore, Aug. 17.—The National Airport squad from Washington, D. C., won the eighteenth annual Evening Sun-Department of Recreation Swimming Meet today, scoring 79 points, to finish 18 points ahead of the second-place Knights of Columbus team from Baltimore.

Irving Einbinder, of Hagerstown, set the only record, swimming the minute 12 and 3-5 seconds to clip one-fifth of a second off the old mark, set in 1937 by R. F. Spangler, of York, Pa.

More than 1,300 juvenile and senior swimmers competed in the meet in Druid Hill Park pool.

The Washington flyers scored 50 points in the men's division and 29 in the women's division. They set marks in two events which were held this year for the first time.

Harry Palmer, of the Airport Team, swam the 800-yard free style in 11 minutes 1 3-5 seconds to win over Paul Ausherman, of Hagerstown. Jackie White, Jackie Kinsey and Katherine Eisele, Airport trio, won the 125-yard medley relay in 1 minute 56 2-5 seconds.

The Southeast Boys' Club of Washington, finished sixth, with 30 points, and the Shoreham Hotel team, Washington, was seventh with 26 points.

Washington entries swept the first three places in the women's diving event. Patricia Palmer and Betty Roland, of the Shoreham Hotel team, finished first and second, respectively, and Joan Treanor, of the Airport team, was third.

Miss Roland also won the 25 and 50-yard races in her division.

50-YARD JUNIOR BOYS' UNLIMITED BACKSTROKE—Won by O'Hara, Druid Hill; second, Cobiente, Lakewood (over age, disqualified); third, Speck, Washington Airport. Time, 37.2 seconds.

100-YARD BREAST STROKE, GIRLS' UNLIMITED—Won by Jackie Kensley, Airport; second, Rita Essex, Airport; third, Gloria Eisler, Airport. Time, 30.2 seconds.

85-YARD JUNIOR BOYS, 85-POUND CLASS—Won by Roland, Airport; second, Rachesen, Washington Boys Club; third, Taylor, Druid Hill; fourth, Harrison, Washington. Time, 14.3 seconds.

SENIOR DIVING, MEN'S—Won by Russell, K. of C.; second, Stamer, K. of C.; third, Reilly, Airport.

Rhodes, Hernan Appointed for Regatta Posts

A. Earle Weeks Names Locals to Handle Canoeing, Rowing

With hopes of having the largest entry list in all divisions in history, A. Earle Weeks, chairman of the aquatic sports committee of the President's Cup Regatta, yesterday announced two committee appointments for the events scheduled September 21-22.

Dusty Rhodes, commodore of the Washington Canoe Club, was named chairman of the canoing division, and George Hernan, president of the Potomac Boat Club, head of the rowing. The canoing and rowing contests will be held September 22, with the swimming meet at the Shoreham September 21.

While the war is expected to curtail foreign entries for the aquatic sports, Weeks indicated that there was a possibility of bringing in a strong Canadian crew—that is if the Dominion will grant approval.

Entry blanks to the tune of 250 were mailed out yesterday to swimming clubs and swimmers through the East and Mid-West. Last season's field was 106, an all-time high.

Weeks stated that Lorraine Fischer, national medley champion from the Women's Swimming Association, of New York, would be down seeking her third leg and permanent possession of the 150-yard medley trophy. She won it the last two years in record-smashing fashion. Miss Fischer is a student at New York University.

In the 300-medley relay for men Penn A. C. and Baltimore K. of C. have two legs on the trophy, Penn having won in 1936 and 1937 and Baltimore last season.

Swimming teams from Penn A. C., Broadwood, Philadelphia, Goldsboro, N. C.; Gonzaga, of New York, already have sent word they would have their stars here.

Arthur H. Clephane, chairman of the Sailing races, expects his greatest fleet for the races September 14-15 over the Potomac.

Cruise on Potomac Launches Regatta Activity Thursday

President's Cup Regatta festivities will open Thursday, August 29, when the annual Gold Cup cruise sets sail down the Potomac, it was announced yesterday by Lloyd Gaines, cruise chairman. This event is held prior to the regatta each year to provide funds for the purchase of racing trophies.

The cruise will be held, rain or shine, on the Wilson Line steamer Mount Vernon, which is glass inclosed for inclement weather. In addition to dancing and entertainment, the committee plans attractive prizes for those aboard.

Prizes, too, will be made available to lucky girls cooperating with the committee in arranging large parties or groups for the cruise. Complete details can be obtained from the American Power Boat Association offices in the American Security Building, according to Gaines.

Final A. A. U. Tank Meet at W.G.C.C. Today

Titles in 220-Yard Freestyle and Diving Events to Be Decided

The curtain falls on local competitive outdoor swimming season this afternoon when the A. A. U. stages the District diving and 220-yard free style championship races at the Washington Golf and Country Club. The meet starts at 2:30 p. m.

Focal point will be the highboard diving for men in which a lively scrap between Defending Champion Bill Tarbett and Bert Williams of the host Washington Golf and Country Club is expected. Williams recently upset Tarbett in the lowboard championship at Takoma and has been pressing the local titleholder in highboard meets this summer.

The lowboard diving for women should evolve into a duel between Patsy Palmer and Lucille Kirsch, both of whom represent the Shoreham Club. Miss Palmer has dominated women's diving events in meets this summer while Miss Kirsch has just recently returned from a two-month stay in Michigan but showed she has lost little of her skill by placing third in the recent Airport diving meet. Mrs. June Booth Stan is another strong entrant in the field.

Fresh from its upset triumph over the Nassau, Bahamas swim team, the Washington Golf and Country Club team will enter two of its finest performers in the 220-yard free style for men in Bill Wright and Gordon Mustin. Wright, District champion in the indoor 220-yard free style, will be favored to add the outdoor laurels to his collection.

During intermission a variety show, postponed from last Thursday, will be held. Jimmy Shinn will perform as a clown diver while 9-year-old Ruth Selker will give a diving exhibition. In addition, the Washington Golf and Country Aquabelles will present a formation diving exhibit.

HIGHBOARD DIVING FOR MEN—Bert Williams (Washington Golf and Country Club), Bill Tarbett (Airport), John Marshall (Airport), Tom Payne (Airport), Conrad Kreps (Airport), Francis Riley (Airport).

LOWBOARD DIVING FOR WOMEN—Patsy Palmer (Shoreham), Helen Glett (Shoreham), Lucille Kirsch (Shoreham), Betty Roland (Shoreham), Joan Trainor (Airport), June Stan (Washington Golf and Country Club), Jackie Richards (Airport).

220-YARD FREE STYLE FOR MEN—Bill Wright (Washington Golf and Country Club), Gordon Mustin (Washington Golf and Country Club), Harry Palmer (Airport).

15-Year-Old Girl Smashes Swim Record

Mary Ryan Breaks 440-Yard Freestyle Record in Portland

By the Associated Press

Jantzen Beach, Portland, Ore., Aug. 17.—Mary Ryan, 15, of Louisville, smashed another national A. A. U. women's outdoor swimming record today in winning the 440-yard freestyle race in 5 minutes, 30.1 seconds.

The old 440-yard record was 5:32.5, set by Lenore Knight, of Homestead, Pa., at New York in 1935.

The little Kentuckian, representing the Lakeside Club, set a new record in the 1-mile race yesterday, nosing out Nancy Merki, of Portland.

Miss Merki, defending champion in the 440-yard event, was forced to the sidelines by illness.

Brenda Helser, Multnomah Club, Portland, followed Miss Ryan across the finish line. Dorothy Leonard, Women's Swimming Association, Worcester, Mass., was third and Doris Brennan, Olneyville Boy's Club, Women's Auxiliary, Providence, R. I., finished fourth.

Finals Slated Today in Boat Championship

Old Dominion Club Host to Virginia And Arundel Crews

Special Dispatch to The Post

Alexandria, Aug. 17.—Oarsmen of the Old Dominion Boat Club will be hosts to the final Southern Rowing Association-sponsored regatta of the summer here tomorrow afternoon, when crews from Potomac Boat Club, of Washington; Virginia Boat Club, of Richmond, and Arundel Boat Club, of Baltimore, will vie with the Alexandrians over the two-mile George Washington Memorial course.

Three events, eight-oared shells, quadruple-oared sculls and four-oared gigs will feature the program, scheduled to get under way at 2 o'clock. Three races are scheduled for each event, with two preliminary heats slated to determine contestants in the finals.

At the three-quarter mark in the summer series, Potomac and Virginia are waging a torrid fight for high-point honors, and tomorrow's races will determine where the association trophy will rest until next season. Potomac tops the list with 40 points, while the Richmonders have 39. Arundel and Old Dominion, with 33 and 18 points, respectively, are virtually out of the running.

The Alexandria crews haven't registered a final victory in the series to date, their best showing having been made in Richmond several weeks ago when they won the first heat in the gig race, only to be deprived of a chance for victory when a broken shell forced cancellation of the final race. However, they are looking forward to making a strong showing in the familiar waters of their home course, and promise to make it hot for the pacesetters in the day's events.

Pairings for the preliminary heats follow: Four-oared gig—Old Dominion vs. Potomac, Virginia vs. Arundel; quadruple-oared sculls—Virginia vs. Potomac, Old Dominion vs. Arundel; eight-oared shell—Virginia vs. Potomac, Old Dominion vs. Arundel.

Loudoun Game, Fish Body Holds Meeting

Leesburg, Va., Aug. 17.—The Loudoun Game and Fish Protective Association will hold a meeting in the office of Trial Justice W. A. Metzger on Tuesday evening at 8 o'clock to discuss the association's stand on the Robertson Act. Dr. Herbert Howard is president of the local body.

Washington Boats Win at Annapolis

Gibson Island and Annapolis Sailors Also Among Victors in Early Heats of Annual Yacht Club's Competition

By the Associated Press

Annapolis, Aug. 16.—Gibson Island, Annapolis, and Washington sailors took places today in a series of 32 races covering heats of the opening program of the Annapolis Yacht Club's fifth annual regatta.

Approximately 200 sail boats took part in the races, interrupted for a time by rain and calm. The storm struck after the morning program had been finished but a northeasterly breeze sprang up after a 2-hour calm and allowed the afternoon heats. The final heats will be sailed tomorrow.

All the races were closely contested and only a few of the yachtsmen were able to bring their boats in for two firsts.

Phelps Hunt, Washington, sailing the Goblin, took both heats in the Penguin event over a 2½-mile course.

R. A. Dunn, in the Rebel, sailing over a 5-mile course, crossed the line twice. The Flying Cloud, handled by Enos Ray, Fair Haven, took two firsts in the Knockabout race, covering 5 miles each time.

The star boat fleet of Gibson Island, represented by D. J. Dunnigan, jr., in the Wave, was first in the two heats of this event, sailed over a course in the Chesapeake Bay.

Fred Carlson's Puddles II, Annapolis Yacht Club, was another two-race winner, taking the lead in both heats of the 20-foot china-bottom class.

A large contingent of midshipmen participated in the Navy knockabout, whaleboat and half-rater classes.

Capt. H. H. J. Benson, U. S. N., sailing the Bonnie, placed second in a heat of the 20-foot round-bottom class.

Wozniak Keeps Swim Crown

By the Associated Press

Clementon, N. J., Aug. 17.—Steve Wozniak, of Buffalo, N. Y., retained the senior National A. A. U. long-distance swimming championship for the fourth consecutive year at Clementon Lake today, finishing the 5-mile grind three-quarters of a mile ahead of his nearest rival.

Wozniak was timed at 2 hours 5 minutes and 16.4 seconds in leading Jack Roderick, of the Canton, Ohio, Sea Lions by a wide margin. Roderick's time was 2 hours 15 minutes and 52.8 seconds.

The Sea Lions won the team title, as Billy Barry finished fourth and Bill Van Allman fifth for the Canton club.

A driving rain marred the finish, but the contestants said later that swimming conditions were ideal.

The summaries:

1. Steve Woznak, Buffalo, N. Y., 2 hours 5 minutes 16.4 seconds.
2. Jack Roderick, Canton, Ohio, 2 hours 15 minutes 52.8 seconds.
3. Robert Donnelly, Worcester, Mass., 2 hours 16 minutes 55.4 seconds.
4. Bill Barry, Canton, Ohio, 2 hours 27 minutes 51 seconds.
5. Bill Van Allman, Canton, Ohio, 2 hours 27 minutes 51.6 seconds.

13,000 See Sure Touch Take Feature Race at Cumberland

Beats Field 4 Lengths, Paying $5.30

Attendance Sets Record; Long Shots Favorites Come Home On Gala Racing Day

By Walter Haight
A Staff Correspondent

Cumberland, Md., Aug. 17.—A crowd estimated as high as 13,000, broke all attendance records for the 16-year history of this track today. With stands jammed to capacity and the lawns a weaving mass of humanity, many customers never saw a race or got close enough to the mutuel windows to place a bet. However, the totalisator had about all the business it could handle as Cumberland said farewell to the horses until another year.

Favorite and long-shot players had their innings and it was a public choice that scored a popular victory in the annual renewal of the Fraternal Order of Eagles Handicap, topping the valedictory program. Under strong handling by Jockey Willie Kelly, one of the saddle heroes of the meeting, Anthony Derrico's Sure Touch came to the wire four lengths in advance of the nearest opposition.

C. O. Ferguson's Wayriel, recently acquired by the claiming route, was second in the battle over the mile and a sixteenth course with Ken's Pop, in the colors of A. Gazzale, third, and a half length from second position.

Pays $5.30 Ticket

Sure Touch's ability, which had already carried him to five victories this year, one early this week, was well known to the crowd, and he paid a $5.30 mutuel. His time of 1:34 was fair over a heavy track.

The winner did not have any the best of the racing luck in the early stages. He was bumped to the outside at the clubhouse turn the first time around and had only one horse beaten at the time. Meanwhile, Wayried and Sky Hostess were battling for the lead. Wayriel disposed of Sky Hostess and then stood off a bid of Palkin.

Kelly moved Sure Touch around on the outside to gain a contention. From that point Kelly rode confidently. He had "dead aim" on Wayriel and Sky Hostess were tering the stretch.

R. C. Waple's War Port earned the tag of "No. 1 hard luck horse" of the meeting in the day's steeplechase. The 7-year-old son of War Whoop, which lost a race here when his jockey miscounted the jumps, was eliminated from contention today when crowded into a beacon while going to the top. Jockey Norman rooks was knocked out of the saddle.

Victor Disqualified

D. B. Barrow's Quakerstreet, credited with causing the mishap, held a 15-length lead with War Port thus erased and jogged to the wire. The stewards, however, listened to Brook's claim of foul and disqualified Quakerstreet, the second choice to War Post in the betting. The ruling moved Carl's Choice, a $22.40 shot and badly beaten, into first position.

The new placing sent Forest Charm into second money and Jacamar, a winner in the first defeat of War Post, into third position.

The disqualification, which seemed warranted not only because of the beacon instance but because Quakerstreet had shut off War Post several times, brought a booing that lasted some five minutes. The presentation of the trophy could be seen but not heard so great was the roar.

The daily double paid $24.10. Kelly rode his first winner of the day aboard Miss Neptune, a $13.80 shot. Jockey Root piloted Blue Prelude, a $4.70 favorite, to victory in the second race to complete the double wager.

Two-Mat-Team Competition Is Resumed

Ernie Dusek Given Return Match With Cox Thursday Night

The two-man wrestling team competition will be resumed Thursday night at Turner's Arena and again will feature Ed Newman and Lou Plummer, the so-called "champs."

Promoter Turner also announced that he had signed Ernie Dusek, the Nebraska wildcat, and Joe Cox, the Kansas Krasher, for a rematch. Dusek, Turner stated, contends he was "robbed" last week by Referee Casey Berger in the bout with Cox, and demanded another shot.

Cox was declared the winner in 30 minutes when Berger, in trying to break the two wrestlers, held Ernie's arms long enough to permit the Kansan to hurl a coupie of rights and lefts to the jaw, sending Ernie crashing to the canvas, out cold. Cox pounced on him for the count.

In the two-man match Newman and Plummer will be shooting for their third straight victory. Their first victims were Tommy O'Toole and Tommy Mahoney and their second Frank Sexton and Maurice LaChappelle.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—MISS NEPTUNE, $13.80, $5.70, $4.10; MAYFERN, $6.50, $4.70; MISTY EYE, $3.90.

MISS NEPTUNE saved ground and escaped trouble at first turn, took command entering backstretch, withstood challenge of MAYFERN approaching stretch and held away under punishment. MAYFERN, first away, swung out at first turn, went to outside of pacemaker and was held safe while under strong handling. MISTY EYE was in close quarters at first turn and came samely in closing stages.

SECOND RACE—About 6½ furlongs. Purse, $400; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from gate. Won driving; place same. Went to post 2:46. Off 2:48. Winner, D. H. Tabler's ch. m. (5), by Calf Roper—Dome. Trained by H. Brown. Value to winner, $300; second, $65; third, $25; fourth, $10. Time, 1:20⅘.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—BLUE PRELUDE, $4.70, $3.30, $2.70; BARRACA, $4.40, $3.10; WESTING, $3.20.

BLUE PRELUDE hustled to front in opening furlongs, shook off WESTING to draw out and was put to extreme pressure to hold BARRACA safe in closing test. BARRACA, forwardly placed from start, improved position gradually, but could not seriously menace winner while under punishment through stretch. WESTING was hard handled and weakened. BUCK BENNY had some early speed.

Daily Double, MISS NEPTUNE and BLUE PRELUDE, Paid $24.10.

THIRD RACE—About 2 miles. Purse, $500. For 4-year-olds and upward. The Bedford Handicap Steeplechase. Start good. Won handily; place driving. Went to post 3:17. Off 3:17⅘. Winner, B. A. Hall's ch. g. Two-dollar mutuels paid—CARL'S CHOICE, $22.20, $8.90, $4.90; FOREST CHARM, $38.10, $13.50; JACAMAR, $6.60

QUAKER STREET took command at once, swerved in front of WAR PORT repeatedly, rode latter into beacon, assumed long lead when WAR PORT lost rider, made bad landing at seventeenth and was in hand at end. QUAKER STREET was disqualified for fouling. CARL'S CHOICE lacked speed on flat while fencing well and was driving at close. FOREST CHARM was not serious contender at any stage.

FOURTH RACE—About 5 furlongs. Purse, $400; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from gate. Won driving; place same. Went to post 3:50. Off 3:51½. Winner, R. C. Waple's br. g. (5), by Blazes—Hiteaway. Trained by M. H. Everhart. Value to winner, $300; second, $65; third, $25; fourth, $10. Time, 0:58.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—SURE TOUCH, $5.30, $3.90, $3.10; WAYRIEL, $17.00, $7.60; KEN'S POP, $3.90.

SURE TOUCH recovered quickly after being bumped at second turn, moved to contention boldly on outside, was steadied until approaching stretch, assumed command when asked and drew out nicely to win easily. WAYRIEL, was vigorously handled, raced SKY HOSTESS into defeat, withstood challenge of PALKIN, but was no match for winner while under punishment through stretch. KEN'S POP was well placed throughout and came willingly at end.

SIXTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $400; claiming. The Cumberland Drug Co. Cup. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from gate. Won driving; place same. Went to post 5:00. Off 5:01½. Winner, Mrs. H. Walters, Jr.'s. ch. h. g. (4), by Groucher—Happy Lope. Trained by L. M. Carver. Value to winner, $300; second, $65; third, $25; fourth, $10. Time, 1:47.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—GIMPEY, $26.90, $11.50, $8.20; LENA GIRL, $16.60, $9.40; REGAL FROLIC, $9.10.

GIMPEY, closest to pace of LYDE, came through on inside to take command entering stretch and held away thereafter under good handling. LENA GIRL, allowed to settle at best stride, came wide for racing room and closed with bold rush. REGAL FROLIC, in close quarters at early turns, was blocked by GIMPEY and held on gamely in closing test. LYDE was hard rushed while setting pace and weakened.

SEVENTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $400; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from gate. Won driving; place same. Went to post 6:35. Off 5:36. Winner, Larry Paoli's ch. f. Two-dollar mutuels paid—LACEY MISS, $6.80, $4.90, $2.90; CHIEF EVERGREEN, $5.30, $3.30; DRESSMAKER, $3.60.

LACEY MISS, within striking distance from start, went to front approaching stretch, drew out and held CHIEF EVERGREEN safe while under drive. CHIEF EVERGREEN, tried to keep up early, saved ground, and responded gamely under punishment in closing quarter to close willingly. DRESSMAKER was hard ridden to dispose of DAVIDOR and weakened gradually after being displaced. MY GRAND went evenly.

EIGHTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $400; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from gate. Won easily; place driving. Went to post 6:14. Off 6:15. Winner, E. G. Busy Morn Wins Beverly Handicap

5-Year-Old Mare Beats Montsin by 2 Lengths at Washington

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Aug. 17.—Busy Morn, a 5-year-old mare owned by B. F. Masterson, Chicago, won the $5,000 added Beverely Handicap for fillies and mares at Washington Park today before a crowd of 20,000.

The winner, ridden by Jockey Kenneth McComba, covered the mile over a slow track in 1:38 3-5.

Busy Morn beat Montain, the Friedberg and Axton entry, which had followed her throughout, by two lengths. Another two and a half lengths back in third place was W. C. Hobson's Shine O'Night, upset winner of the Arlington Matron Stakes.

Fourth in the field of eight was Valdina Farm's Valding Gold. Then came Woolford Farm's Inscoelda, Manie O'Hara, running mate to Motsin; Mrs. Emil Denemark's Colorado Ore and E. E. Irby's Torch Stick.

Busy Morn, closing at 3 to 1, returned $8.20, $4.40 and 3.20. Montain paid $4.00 to place and $3.00 to show. The show price on Shine O'Night was $3.80.

Your Dog . . .

By George Berner.

BERNER

Since the beginning of man the dog or his counterpart—an animal which resembled the present-day dog much more than the early men resemble us—has been at his side. Fighting man's enemies, hunting with him for his food and helping him kill, the dog was taught to herd and care for cattle and sheep, to guard them from their natural enemies as well as drive them to places suitable to their well-being.

He was taught to draw sleighs and carts, to carry packs on his back. Later breeds were developed for the hunting of birds and, before the days of guns, to crouch low after finding them so the hunter's net could be thrown over them as well as the fowl.

In recent years we have seen many breeds develop, each suited for one particular job. As the result there are water retrievers, highly successful bird and rabbit dogs for the sportsman and guard dogs which need little training to make them lead those that cannot see.

We have heard people ask, "Why should I have a dog? I don't particularly need a pet." There are many reasons for owning a good dog and the least of them is as a pet. Some folks will argue that they have no flocks of sheep or herds of cattle for a dog to watch. They certainly don't need a dog to pull them on a sled, and, as they don't hunt, they have no use for a sporting dog. Let's look at a few reasons for having a dog and what kind of a dog fits each reason:

The dog's value to the farmer is as it has always been. We know farmers who tell us that their dog takes the place of another hand. In the North, too, the dog is invaluable as he has always been. But what about the fellow who lives in or near the city and has no use for a working dog? Some of them feel that they have no use for a watch dog as the police are always on the job. But are they right?

Houses are entered every night. There are holdups and kidnapings continually. Women are accosted and attacked and many other things occur which we wouldn't want to happen to us or ours. Obviously we cannot have enough officers to prevent all this. It is absurd to think that we can have a policeman in each of our homes. But we can have something that is better than any man, policeman or otherwise. Something that isn't in the least afraid of guns or other threatening instruments and something that will gladly give his life for those he loves.

Hundreds of thousands of men whose business keeps them from home during the evening depend on dogs to safeguard their families. Numberless traveling men, miles from home, go to sleep knowing that dogs are guarding their families even better than they could, with one eye and one ear open always, listening for every unfamiliar noise or suspicious sound. And any dog can be a watch dog. It isn't necessary that he be one of the larger breeds. A good healthy bark from an alert little dog will frighten most intruders away. Of course, the larger breeds which have been used for centuries as guard dogs are better, as they instinctively watch everybody and everything connected with them or the family.

Now—for fun with a dog. Some men play golf. Others have various hobbies which consume their leisure time. But if you have no hobby, get one of the small terriers—the Dandie Dinmont, the Skye, the Sealyham, the Scottish, the Cairn or any of the others and take a walk with him and look for mice and rats. It doesn't sound very exciting perhaps, but, my friend, you'll take a new interest in life just lifting boards, kicking brush piles—just to get a rat out for that little fellow to do battle with. It's fun with a capital F, keeps you out in the open and it's just possible it might reduce that alderman you're wearing around your middle.

The Dachshund, too, will furnish many an hour of fun if you'll just take him walking through the fields and woods. He'll investigate every hole he comes to, regardless of its size and the things he finds in them will be worth seeing. He'll go in anywhere that he can get his head in, and anything in there is coming out with him and you can gamble on that.

There's still one thing that will look up to you as to a god, though; to whom you'll have not a fault and who will ask only to be where he can see you and adore you. Yep, you guessed right, it's a dog again and when you're in the dog house for some reason or other and friend wife isn't speaking to you temporarily, you can drop your hand on his head and always get that look from his eyes which tells you plainer than words that you're O. K., absolutely the tops. Gentlemen, that's worth something.

Arlington County Nine Answerable Only to Falls Church Mayor-Elect

B. N. Gibson, Newly-Elected Mayor of Town, Claims Many Successes as Sports Promoter

By Bill Burnett

"It was this way, Mister Mayor. Our first base coach says he's swiped the signal. The next one'll be hard and fast down the middle, he says. So I swing from the heels, but all I hear is the umpire yelling 'Yer Out.' Can I help it if the pitcher ain't got control, Mister Mayor?"

Thus may run the alibi of a fanned member of the Gibson Grays after September 1.

For on that date B. N. Gibson, sponsor of the powerful Arlington County nine, will be duly sworn in as Mayor of Falls Church, Va. He will then be the only mayor of a city in this vicinity with a ball club answerable to him, and to him alone. If necessary, he could swing a city ordnance making an unlawful nuisance of any club which threatens to whip his Grays.

The chances are that that won't happen though. Future Mayor Gibson and his athletic organizations win enough to suit the most victory-hungry sponsor in the country. His teams will merely continue their winning ways, and under one of the most unique setups you'll run into in a long time.

To begin with, Future Mayor Gibson runs a filling station. Not an ordinary gas-and-oil station, but one of the most glorified imaginable. It's a combination tourist camp, country store, restaurant, night club and garage. The only things you can't buy there are umbrellas and tractors, or maybe last January's edition of Esquire.

A kindly looking gentleman of 49 years, Mr. Gibson lords it over this varied domain with a quiet authority. Besides attending to the many angles of his business, Mr. Gibson must take time to talk to his ball players, be free to attend all their games.

As strange as anything is the manner in which Gibson started promoting athletics in Falls Church. He never was a terrific star himself—he played mostly in church baseball leagues as a third baseman back in 1910—but his interest is nonetheless personal.

"I finally figured," he says, "somebody had to give the kids something to do, better than playing in the streets. There was no one else with 'push' enough, so I took it on myself."

With his son, 12-year-old Bunny, as a nucleus, Gibson then organized the first Gibson Grays baseball team. That was back in 1934. Now Bunny is a sophomore at V. P. I., but he comes home summers to play with the Grays. The team has progressed from pee-wee ball to unlimited in six years.

The Grays nine now is in third place in the Old Dominion League, only a whisper off the pace of the leaders. That's one of the poorest records the club has had. In 1938 it won 45 and lost 15.

Bowling and basketball teams also perform under the Gibson banner, and a huge trophy case in the center of the glorified filling station attests their success.

Future Mayor Gibson's days, it seems, aren't yet quite full enough.

"When I'm mayor," he says, "I think I'll do a lot of campaigning for a huge gym here in Falls Church. It's a real necessity. That'll be something to fill in my spare time, anyway."

Whizzer White Signs to Play Pro FootballWith Lions

Diroit, Aug. 17 (AP).—Fred L. Mandel, jr., owner of the Detroit Lions, National Professional Football League team, announced today he had signed Byron (Whizzer) White, University of Colorado All-America halfback in 1937, for the 1940 season.

White played with the Pittsburgh Pirate eleven in 1938, but last year he went to Oxford on a Rhodes scholarship.

"I'm back in football because I love to play football," said White after signing the contract, terms of which were not revealed.

White will be the second great backfield product of the Rocky Mountain region to play with the Lions. "Dutch" Clark, famed product of Colorado College and now coach of the Cleveland Rams, played here for three years.

Dog Queries

Q. I have a chance to get an English bulldog, but have been told they are very vicious. Is this true and would you recommend one for children?

A. If there is anything a child can do to make a bulldog bite, we'd like to know what it is. We don't know of anything and there isn't a finer companion in the world for your children. The bulldog is perhaps the least vicious of all dogs.

Q. My dog's eyes are continually running, just a clear fluid resembling tears, but it keeps his face dirty all the time. What can I do?

A. Try a few drops of plain mineral oil in your dog's eyes three times a day for a week. If there is no improvement, try boric acid irrigations three times a day for a week and then if no improvement, take him to a vet.

D. C. WOMEN ATHLETICS

This column is sponsored by the District Board of the National Section of Women's Athletics, American Association for Health, physical Education and Recreation.

By Margaret Davis

It's not necessary to be a girl athlete to be a girl flier; but it doesn't hurt, and it is probably a good idea. Not that flying takes much muscle, but muscle tone is certainly to be desired, among other things.

DAVIS

Northwestern University's Dr. Everett Edmonson, who directs the school's Civil Aeronautics group, recommends a national program of sports to produce aviators for national defense, admits that women pilots have a place in the program.

According to Dr. Edmonson, quick coordination, competitive spirit and the ability to join in teamwork are qualities developed by sports which are necessary in producing good men or women pilots.

Washington's women pilots think he's right, but with reservations. Cecile Hamilton, of the National Aeronautics Association, who has done 800 hours since learning from the same Capt. Baker, who taught the Duke of Windsor, says it isn't at all necessary for women to be athletic, that she has known innumerable instances of women who rose from rocking chairs to slip into the pilot's seat. But Miss Hamilton does say that rhythmic sense, trained eyesight and the use of quick judgment are qualities of a sportswoman which may be applied to flying.

Mrs. Gertrude Chesnut, women's editor of Trans Radio Press, who has been flying four years, has always been active and frankly agrees with the professor. She says healthy living and outdoor sports keep your nerves under control, recalls a classic example of the ultrafeminine type who, against her instructor's advice, took hours of training but was never able to get over ground fear and become a pilot.

Mrs. Margo Tanner, mother of a 10-year-old boy, and daughter of the first flying grandmother, says she has never known a woman pilot who hasn't been prominent in sports at some time. Although she finds that flying takes most of her leisure time now, she spent schooldays winning letters in hockey and basketball, playing tennis five hours a day, and dancing. Ruth Gillies, president of the "99," is an expert skeet shooter, swimmer, bowler, and sailor. Ruth Nichols was an outstanding collegiate athlete.

Mrs. Tanner also pointed out that the woman pilot who had laughingly told us she had had to exercise for three years, was formerly an active horse woman.

Caroline Hager, 18-year-old pilot daughter of Mrs. Alice Rogers Hager, author of "Wings Over the Americas," agrees with her mother that sports develop "muscular coordination and the ability to use your head." She has found time to fly a lightship for 70 hours during the past year and a half, and also to swim, ride and play tennis frequently.

Bob Ashburn, president of Ashburn Flying Service, Inc., has trained pilots for six years and recalls numerous girl athletes who "turned out very nicely." The girl who spends most of her time sitting around is likely to be "punk."

About Boats

By Marshall Andrews

Among racing sailboats, the Snipe is unique not only for its performance but because it is directly a product of the motor age.

ANDREWS

Back in 1931 the Florida West Coast Racing Association held a meeting at Sarasota. There it was decided it was high time sailors had a boat fast enough for racing, sturdy enough to stand hard knocks afloat and ashore and so designed that it could be carted from meet to meet on a trailer, as outboard racers carried their craft.

The upshot of the meeting was that W. F. Crosby, who was present, published in The Rudder plans for a small sailboat answering the demand expressed there. In accordance with Rudder policy of naming its designs for seabirds, it was called Snipe.

The Crosby design was 15 feet, 6 inches long and 5 feet in the beam and three months after it was published the first report from a Snipe builder reached The Rudder. Snipe owner No. 1 was a 14-year-old boy, Jimmy Brown, of Pass Christian, Miss.

By December, Rudder had sold out of designs and printed more and then Snipe owners demanded a national Snipe class and a system of registration. They got it, and Jimmy Brown was given the first racing number, No. 1 in the class.

A year later, 150 Snipes were registered throughout the country and work on one or two had been started here. One of the first Snipe builders in Washington was Weston W. Valentine, present captain of the Potomac River Snipe fleet, who launched his boat early in 1933. Last year closed with 3,750 Snipes in 122 registered fleets.

The Snipe, in addition to its restricted length and breadth, must weigh not less than 450 pounds with all equipment. It carries a triangular (Marcont) mainsail not more than 79 square feet in area and an overlapping jib limited to 37 square feet, a maximum total sail area of 116 square feet. Snipe's rudder is wooden and is carried outboard and the centerboard, also of wood, may be hinged or dagger type and the mast is limited to 20 feet 3 inches. The hull is V-bottomed with flaring sides, making a very seaworthy boat.

"We believe that in the Snipe we have a more seaworthy boat than other classes approaching them in size and weight," said Valentine. "Although our local boats cannot quite match the best of those locally in speed, our fleet has not quite yet developed the really keen competition that develops really fast boats."

And, to this department, that sounds like enough of the competitive spirit to develop any racing class sooner or later to the limit.

Bill Ackerman ON FISHING

Fishing Is Greatest Participation Sport In the World

One Washington woman, who every day expresses her opinion—usually in an extremely interesting manner, tells us this week that "fishing merely for the fun of it is the lowest form of recreation, as I understand that word." She does qualify it somewhat in believing it might be herself that is deluded.

ACKERMAN

We can't believe this woman is deluded, but uneducated in this lowest of sports, which, according to figures released several months back, became last year the greatest participation sport in all the world. More than 25,000,000 Americans, by means of it, enjoyed a surcease from care and everyday duties in the open.

Would it be out of the way to suggest that were she to learn a little of the sport by way of a competent teacher her viewpoint might be changed? It can't be that any sport that brings such a return in fun and happiness that fishing does could by any stretch of the imagination be called low.

Neither can the regalia of the well-dressed trout fisherman, with all his gadgets, be any more ridiculous than those we see going to the beaches every week-end. Most important however, both bring joy. More power to both, and in these days we need both.

George Simon will be bait-casting captain, Ray Rogers fly captain and Dr. Bill Holton official scorer in the Eighth Annual Tournament of the National Capital Casting Club to be held at the Lincoln Memorial Reflecting Pool on Sunday, September 8.

This meeting is restricted to members of any casting club affiliated with the Eastern Association of Angling Clubs, but if you want to compete that can be arranged through Ray Rogers at 329 Farragut street northwest by membership in the local club.

Col. Bill Chantland, fishing in Cornfield Harbor because the Middles are untenantable due to the continuous northeast winds, was able to catch only spot and big hardheads that were striking hard enough to almost take the rods out of his hands, while Capt. Taft Tippet, with whom he was fishing, was catching nothing but large trout. What's the matter Bill? Slipping?

The second white marlin of the season has been caught off the Jersey coast—by a boat out of Brielle. The first fell to Dan Stebbins of Atlantic City. Looks as though that first run that hit Ocean City July 20 has been laying off the Jersey coast in front of the northeast winds, that have been blowing now for almost two weeks.

The tuna run was interrupted on Tuesday by a single white marlin that was caught by Dr. Ignatius Rutkoski, a local Washington angler fishing with Capt. Lev Raymond on the Lev-Lou. It was taken nearly 50 miles southeast of Ocean City, and because it threw the hook and was fouled through the dorsal, required two hours and five minutes to land. Shortly before Jimmie Freeman had a tuna on and in sight of the boat that was estimated to weigh close to 200 pounds by Capt. Raymond before it broke off. The first dolphin of the season was caught also by Freeman, although another was taken the same day by another boat. Neither one weighed over 5 pounds. The big pairs have been missing this season. We are wondering whether the schools of small dolphin will arrive late this month.

Ted Norpath Captures Junior Net Crown

Chicago, Aug. 16 (AP).—Ted Norpath, Houston, Tex., won the junior singles title of the fourth annual River Forest Invitational Tennis Tournament today with a 9—7, 3—6, 7—5 victory over Dick Elliott, of Trinity, Tex.

Tee to Green

By Merrell Whittlesey

The home stretch is here and starting with the last week in August and for six or eight weeks following, a dozen national and city golf championships will be decided. This is how they look in comparison to the fall finish of the 1939 birdie-bogey artists.

WHITTLESEY

National P. G. A.—Last year the District was represented in the big match play week in New York by Cliff Spencer and Mel Shorey were on the way back before the first round was under way-nonqualifiers. This year it looks better. Lew Worsham and Gene Larkin are both fairly familiar with the Hershey course. They're both playing good golf and have already national experience this year in the Open. Lew says he'll bet a million he gets to the quarter-finals. Gene hasn't said it, but I'll bet he thinks the same. The field will be great, but we think the local boys might be just the ones to break the out-of-town jinx that follows District golfers.

National Amateur—Bobby Brownell was the lone local amateur ace represented in Chicago last year. This year he'll probably represent the District in New York but not alone. Bobby should win a place at Chevy Chase. We hear Roger Peacock has his eyes set on the amateur. So have a lot of others. Claude Rippy, Ralph Bogart, Earle Skinker and others. There is no one here with the class of Bud Ward, Jim Ferrier, Johnny Goodman, or even Johnny Burke. But they are in a class with 100 or more amateurs who beat them every year. It's about time the tables were turned.

Maryland State team matches—Indian Spring has lost most of its championship line-up, but enough are left to make a respectable showing. Terra Mariae in Baltimore, last year's finalists, are just as strong. It may take Congressional or a dark horse line-up such as Manor of Beaver Dam to stop the Baltimoreans this year. Possibly, they won't be stopped.

City public links—If anybody that plays local public golf beats Andy Oliveri I don't know who will be more surprised, Andy, his conqueror, or S. G. Leoffler. Leoffler already has his money out to buy another trophy, as this is Andy's year to retire the big one.

District Amateur—Ralph Bogart, personally, has no intentions of giving up his District amateur title. The youngster may be hard to beat, but Bobby Brownell is going to miss a few days from Duke to play, and the District Golf Association is intent on getting a record entry. Volney Burnett likes Manor, Peacock scores well there, and Harry Pitt may come out of retirement and be tough again. But we are sure of one thing. If you don't get your entries in the Saturday previous you won't play. No post entries.

Women's Inter-city matches—At the risk of drawing the ire of the District Women golfers, we will remind them that last year's score against Philadelphia was 47 to 7, and not in favor of Washington. You also have a little matter of revenge against Baltimore for a spring defeat. The rest is up to you.

Women's National—Washington's representation in the championship at Del Monte, Calif., will be six less than last year in Connecticut. Mrs. Myron Davy will be the lone starter. If determination counts, she'll be hard to beat.

Sectional pro-am championship—Ralph Bogart again, with Lew Worsham as a partner. These are the defending champs. However, they had better not wait until the last green to drop the 70-foot putt that won for them last year. This year it might stay out. What did Bobby Jones say? Beat them early, when you get six up, don't loaf, get seven up.

Mid-Atlantic Women's—The majority of feminine golf followers like Mrs. Stokes to win any tournament she enters. Last year, in the major match play affairs, she batted .333. This year thus far, the average is .500. Unless she meets with new opposition, it will probably be .667 when the Middle Atlantic is over.

District Open—The big question about the District Open is not who will win it, but if it will be played. Wiffy Cox has taken care of the winnings the last two years it was held. What he wants is somebody to revive it again.

St. Louis Legion Nine Captures Regional Title

Harold Kleine, a big left-handed pitcher, was the hero of the Missourians. He pitched them to a 2-1 victory over Knoxville in the first game of the tournament, then he stepped in in a relief role last night to shut off the Hoosiers. The Indiana team advanced to the finals with a 12-4 win over Louisville.

The St. Louis team's victory in this four-State district regional play won the right to compete next week in the Southeastern sectional meet at Rock Hill, S. C.

Eastern Shore Sets Amateur Golf Meet

Easton, Md., Aug. 17 (AP).—George A. Dobyne, chairman of the general committee, announced today the Eastern Shore amateur golf championship matches would be played at the Talbot Country Club August 30 to September 2.

The qualifying rounds will be played August 30. Match play will begin the following day, with the finals on Labor Day.

J. Porter Matthews, of the local club, is the defending champion.

Trophies will be awarded by John Charles Thomas, noted barytone and president of the Talbot Country Club.

McAfee Plans To Join All-Star Gridders, Aug. 29

Richmond, Va., Aug. 17.—George McAfee, Duke University's great halfback, plans to join the Naion's College all-star football players preparing for their game with the Green Bay Packers on August 29, it was learned here today.

Although he had been invited previously, McAfee had not made the trip because of a promise to his employer, Wilfred G. Epes, jr., of Baltimore, that he would not play in the game. Mr. Epes later informed McAfee that he would not stand in his employe's way if he wanted to play.

Arlington Classic Purse Increased to $40,000

Chicago, Aug. 17 (AP).—The 1941 Arlington classic will be increased to $40,000 in added money, a boost of $10,000, John D. Allen, president of the Jockey Club announced today. He estimated the event would gross $70,000.

Maskery Receives Medal After 40 Years

Haledon, N. J., Aug. 17 (AP).—Edgar J. Maskery won a 220-yard dash at a Paterson track meet in 1900 but he received the medal only yesterday.

It was found among the possessions of the late J. Henry Leonard who had sent it to the engraver for inscription and apparently forgot about it afterward.

Post & Rail

By Anne Hagner

Reaching a new high in both swank and bright prospects is the prize list for the Columbus Horse Show, which fell into the hands of a waiting world several days ago. From where we're standing, Secretary Vincent P. Lester and his associates seem to have planned the equine standout of the fall season, given a few breaks.

Anne Hagner

Breaks, however, have not come easily in the past to the hard-working Forest Glen boys. Last year, with a record entry list that apparently headed the show for tremendous financial success, the weather man took a hand in the proceedings. The Meadowbrook grounds were ankle-deep in mud, such as only Meadowbrook can produce, and subsequent transferal to Fort Myer's indoor ring did very little for the spectator situation.

This trip, set for September 7 and 8, finds the entire Rail Bird League pulling as it has never pulled before for the success of a show, for its members recall the committee's 1939 plight. One thought that may encourage them is that if the Washington Horse Show could get through three days without its traditional rain, it can happen anywhere. Miracles do happen.

Highlight of this year's event is the Bobby Robey Memorial Trophy, to be awarded to the owner of the horse or pony scoring the most points during the show. Funds for the trophy are being donated by the many hundreds of show folk who took interest in the career of one of the country's most brilliant riders, who died here last spring.

The contributions are already well on the way toward the $1,000 mark, and the prize promises to be the handsomest of its kind that has ever been offered locally. It is a beautifully detailed silver statue of a top-hatted gentleman in Corinthian attire jumping a horse over a brush fence, with every item of appointments, conformation and proportion absolutely correct.

The books are due to close tomorrow, but no doubt a quick phone call to Secretary Lester will take care of last-minute entries. The judges: for hunters and jumpers, Jack Carpenter, Otto Furr, and Danny Shea; for ponies and junior classes, Margaret Cotter and Maj. R. M. Stewart Richardson.

To clear up the slightly befuddled late summer situation, you may want to know that the Keswick Hunt Club is holding its show on August 24 down in Virginia. From there you get a one-day breather, only to hop over to Orange for the Orange Horseman's Association show August 26 and 27, and then off to Warrenton and its show August 31 and September 2.

Warrenton, by the way, is definitely the place to be over the Labor Day week-end, what with innumerable parties, dances and possibilities that the knockdown-and-out class will go as high as 6½ feet. Warrenton's citizenry would do well to remove all breakables before the onslaught of the hoss-loving "foreigners."

And more entertainment: The Columbus show is having a luncheon, a reception and a dance for exhibitors and judges. Add to these attractions a quartet of well-rounded divisions for conformation horses, working hunters, open jumpers and juniors, and there, ladies and gentlemen, you have a horse show what is a horse show!

Rail chips: U. S. Randle's latest addition in the stable, Top Mast, won himself some nice ribbons in the recent Westminster show, his ring debut over fences . . . Word from the Washington Bridle Trails Association announces that the stable standards committee has inspected and approved for membership Meadowbrook Saddle Club and Potomac Riding School . . . George Walker, W. H. Montgomery and E. Boyd Keys make up the committee which is headed by Angelina Carabelli . . . in response to queries, the Chevy Chase Horse Show is Sunday, September 22.

Scheduled Bout Has No Fight Site

New York, Aug. 18 (AP).—The Georgia Pace Lou Salica bantamweight championship fight is scheduled for next Thursday night but the promoters are not sure where it is going to be held.

It was slated for the Polo Grounds, which was leased to Mike Jacobs for fights, as the feature of a benefit show for Bethune-Cookman College of Florida. That fell through. Then promoter Fred Irwin tried to get Starlight Park but was unable to make a deal.

Late today, Walter St. Denis, publicity man for the fight, said the fight was still on. Irwin was out scouting around for a stadium.

Four Top Batters Make No Headway; Chicagoan Has .355 Average

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Aug. 17.—The big four—Rip Radcliffe, St. Louis; Barney McCosky, Detroit; Lou Finney, Boston, and Luke Appling, Chicago—aren't making any headway at all in settling the American League batting championship.

All four have been flirting with the top for many weeks, but none has been able to build up a comfortable lead and maintain it. Meanwhile, the defending champion, Joe DiMaggio of the New York Yankees, who batted .381 a year ago, has been crawling up on the leaders.

DiMaggio advanced 12 points closer to the top the last week, including games of Friday, adding seven points to his own mark while Radcliffe, the leader, was losing five points.

Radcliffe now has a .355 average, eight points ahead of McCosky in second place. Finney is batting .346 and Appling .345. Frank Hayes of Philadelphia is tagged at .338 and DiMaggio is tied for sixth with Taft Wright of Chicago and Ted Williams of Boston at .335. Cecil Travis of Washington is ninth at .333 and Hank Greenberg of Detroit is tenth with a .332 mark.

There are no changes in the departmental leaders. Jimmy Foxx, of Boston, met the challenge to his home run leadership by banging out five, to run his total to 31. Greenberg's runs-batted-in total is now 104, nine ahead of DiMaggio.

Finney and McCosky share the triple-hitting lead with 13 apiece, and McCosky also has the most hits, 153. Williams has scored the most runs, 95, and Lou Boudreau, of Cleveland, still is tops in doubles, with 41. George Case, of Washington, swiped two more bases, to run his total to 26.

Bob Feller, of Cleveland, ran his impressive strikeout total to 200 even, while winning his twentieth and twenty-first games, as against six losses. Buck Newsom, of Detroit, however, has won 15, while losing only two games.

Detroit leads in team batting and the Yankees in team fielding. The Browns executed ten more double plays for a total of 134 in 116 games.

Baltimore's Howell Ups I. L. Plate Lead

By the Associated Press

New York, Aug. 17.—To the consternation of the opposition pitchers in the International League, Murray Howell, of the Baltimore Orioles, seems to be getting better.

Howell has been leading the league's batsmen for weeks, and pitchers had hoped that the law of averages, or a natural slump might help them out. But the big Baltimore outfielder, at the conclusion of Wednesday's games, boasted an average of .363, better by some four points than it was a week ago.

That left him 27 points ahead of Clyde McCullough, of Buffalo, who was also second last week.

George Staller, of Montreal, and Gene Corbett, of Baltimore, who have been waging a duel for third-place honors all season, finally broke it up when Staller's bat failed him. He dropped down to sixth place. Corbet is in fourth place, losing out to Teammate Nick Etten, whose .323 shades him by two points.

Trailing Corbett, among the regulars with 350 or more times at bat are: Tommy Holmes, Newark, .318; Staller, Montreal, .317; Don Ross, Montreal, .317; Dusty Cooke, Jersey City, .310; Harry Davis, Rochester, .307, and Goody Rosen, Syracuse, .307.

Howell, in addition to leading the batters, also has scored the most runs, with 103. Tommy Holmes continued to be the leader in total hits, with 168, while Corbett has the most doubles, 35.

Staller, as he did last week, heads the triple hitters with 10, and Bill Nagel is the home run king still, with 34 to his credit. He also holds the runs-batted-in lead with 102.

Pat Mullin, of Buffalo, is the fleetest of foot in the league, having stolen 17 bases.

Mike Ryba, of Rochester, is the most effective hurler, having chalked up 18 victories against 6 defeats.

Minor Leaguer Fined For Fight in Game

Savannah, Ga., Aug. 17 (AP).—A fist fight with Connie Ryan, second baseman for the Savannah Indians, cost Ed Stanky, Macon shortstop and field captain, $100 in police court today.

The levy was imposed by Judge H. Mercer Jordan after Stanky was accused of being aggressor in the scrap. The blows were swapped as the teams changed sides in the eighth inning of the first game in a double-header last night. Ryan was dismissed.

Greatest Air Battle In History Fought Over British Isles

By Frank L. Dennis.

For I dipped into the future,
Far as human eye could see,
Saw the vision of the world,
And all the wonder that would be;
Saw the heavens filled with commerce,
Argosies of magic sails,
Pirates of the purple twilight,
Dropping down with costly bales;
Heard the heavens filled with shouting,
And there rained a ghastly dew
From the nations' airy navies
Grappling in the central blue.

Tennyson's "Locksley Hall," 1842.

The headlines in The Washington Post Monday, August 12, 1940, read:

BRITISH, NAZI AIR FLEETS IN GREAT BATTLE
English Report 60 Raiders Are Shot Down in Attack of 400

The headlines Tuesday said:

Germans Launch Greatest Attack on England; 500 Planes Batter Island in Furious Battle.

And Wednesday:

British Repel Warships in Channel as Nazis Claim Control of Air Over Southern England

And Thursday:

British Bombers Blast Nazi Blitzkrieg Bases On French Channel Coast, Setting Great Fires

And Friday:

1,000 Planes Storm England, Blast Croydon; 144 German Craft, 106 British Reported Down

And Saturday:

Germans, British Both Claim Mastery of Air After Fierce Nazi Attacks on London Suburbs; U. S. Negotiating for Bases in English Possessions

Never was there a week in which headlines so quickly grew out of date. Considering the objectives of censorship, it must also be noted that the headlines—and the stories from Europe this week—of necessity cannot tell anything but generalities.

The rising tempo of the German attacks on England seemed to mean that the time was at hand for the climax of Hitler's planned offensive. But the details of that plan still remained a question to military men here and in Britain.

As the week drew to a close, it was still debatable whether it is Hitler's intent to follow up the air attacks with an attempted invasion, or whether he hopes to punish England into suing for peace by the use of bombs alone.

Within another week, the question probably will be answered. Indeed, within another week, England's resistance may be ebbing, but there is no evidence (always bearing the censorship in mind) that the British are being overwhelmed yet.

As history's most spectacular battle continued, day and night, in the great sea that is the air, the British seemed to be at least holding their own, and even while suffering the most severe attacks they set out on incidental bombing trips to Italy, the first of the war.

Hard-pressed at home by the Germans, the British were hard-pressed last week in Africa by the Italians, whose superiority in numbers was beginning to tell. The Italians, pressing every advantage, took the opportunity afforded by Britain's plight to put the heat on Greece, a friend of Britain. Various overt acts pointed to an undeclared war on the Greeks—the torpedoing of a Greek warship by an unidentified submarine, and the attempted bombing of two Greek destroyers by planes identified by the Greeks as Italian.

The Greeks were doing nothing to provoke attack, but the odds appeared to be against their being able to keep out of trouble with Italy. A nation, like an individual, seeking an excuse for a fight, usually can find one.

Although the courage of the British continued high, and they admitted nothing that would indicate a weakening of their defenses, one straw in an ominous wind was the offer by Britain of American use of her possessions for naval bases in the Atlantic, from Newfoundland south. This could only mean that Britain was preparing for the worst possibility, the driving of the headquarters of empire from the Isles to the Western Hemisphere, with the United States to help her guard it.

When the history of the war is written, when the bars of censorship are down, some of the most interesting reading will have to do with the incidents of battle and of strategy, of individual experiences and problems. Not much of this kind of news is coming through now, but a couple of last week's sidelights gained attention:

One was the German ruse of sowing parachutes, 50 or more of them, in an area in the industrial midlands of England. For a while Wednesday the British thought a detachment of parachute saboteurs had landed uncaptured, but the conditions of the 'chutes indicated they had been dropped for panic purposes, probably from a single airplane.

Another was the use by the British of a floating net for air-raid defense purposes. Not much data about this device is known here, except that it operates on the coil, or spring, principle, expanding after being fired from a big gun, and drifting under the support of tiny parachutes as a menace to raiders. The British claimed that at least one great German bomber was trapped to destruction in such a net Thursday.

Summary of the week:

AIR

Almost all wars are won or lost by the prowess of young men, harnessed and directed by experienced older men. This war, whose outcome will affect the lives of more people for generations than any other in history, will have been won and lost by fewer men, and younger, than any other.

The men who man the planes that are incessantly in combat these days over Britain mostly range in ages from 18 to 30. Some of the gunners and bombardiers aboard are older, but it's the youngsters whose skill at the controls is probably the decisive factor. And the best estimate is that not more than 30,000 pilots all told, on both sides, will have participated when this titanic combat ends. All last week the best young blood and brains of Germany and Britain were striking at each other in the element least natural to man, the air.

The battle this week followed the pattern of all the British-German air fighting so far in this war, the variation being in the number of planes involved.

Most of the German assaults have appeared to come from bases in Western Europe, rather than from Norway and Denmark. As the week progressed, the number of attacking planes grew from a few score to more than 1,000.

Early in the week the objectives were the naval bases in the south of England, and the industrial and armament areas in the midlands. Later, airfields and the utilities centers around London were added to the objectives.

What the results were, no one knows. The British minimize the damage, saying nothing disastrous occurred—as did the French in early June when actually the German bombers were making France helpless.

The real problem is this: What is the comparative loss in planes? If Britain is able to maintain an air force large enough to combat the Germans on something like even terms, until bad weather sets in next month, she probably can win the war—for during the winter she can build as many planes as Germany, and better ones.

At the close of the week, Britain estimated Germany had lost 551 planes to 131 for Britain, while Berlin was claiming 623 British planes brought down to Germany's 107.

On the basis of German and British claims at other times during the war, it is reasonable to assume that the British estimate is more nearly true than the German—especially since the defense has a considerable advantage even in air warfare. Even so, the question remains: Can Britain afford to continue losing planes in the same proportion as now? If not, each victory is a pyrrhic one, for if Germany lost all but a few hundred planes while Britain was losing all hers, Germany still would be the victor.

The air offensive was not held alone by Germany. All during the week, the British were attacking airfields, railheads, factories, and troop concentration points on the continent, and made at least two raids on distant Italy. Since the raids on Italy involved long flights and the violation of Switzerland's neutrality, they are especially encouraging to the friends of Britain. They mean not only that Britain has planes to spare for incidental trips to Italy, but that she has a disregard for the rights of a neutral that she lacked to her cost in the early months of the war.

SEA

Where are the 17 British warships that two weeks ago put out into the Atlantic from Gibraltar?

Nothing has been reported of them since. Are they in English waters? Are they ready for an attempted German invasion?

Probably no one but the British admiralty knows.

The war at sea was at low ebb last week. The Italian navy appears to be largely locked up in safe harbors, unwilling to try conclusions with whatever fleet the British still has stationed in Mediterranean waters.

Another of the big questions today is that of what damage has been done by bombs to British naval bases at home. Here again the truth is locked in the censored data of the admiralty.

Aside from the torpedoing of a small number of British vessels, including the Franconia, well known to the American West Indies tourist trade, and the dispersing of three small concentrations of Nazi minesweepers and torpedo boats in the North Sea, there was no war at sea last week.

Freedom of the seas officially became a myth Saturday with Germany's promulgation of a blockade of the British Isles.

German armed forces will "utilize fully" their strategic position from the Bay of Biscay to the North Cape of Norway, as well as their supremacy on the sea and in the air around England, the communique said, in advising neutral countries not to send any ships into the German-English war area. German planes will attack any ship entering the war zone, and the Reich will take no responsibility for the damage.

That sounds like the unrestricted submarine warfare of the last war.

LAND

The war in Africa continued last week to be a succession of preliminary Italian victories which might at any time be turned into a major triumph.

Apparently the Italian strategy is to use Italy's greatly superior force, numerically, in such a way as to prevent any consolidation of the limited British forces. Thus the immediate Italian objectives are four-fold: Seizure of the Nile delta; occupation of British Somaliland ports; seizure of the British North Kenya waterhole bases; and cutting of the Nile in two at historic Khartoum.

Most of Italy's 250,000 troops in Africa are in Libya, most of Britain's 150,000 are in the Egyptian Red Sea area. What they hope to do is hold up the Italian advances in Somaliland, Kenya, and Khartoum, while holding the Delta and the Alexandria naval base. The longer the war, the better for the British, for if they can keep the fleet base inviolate they can maintain the Mediterranean blockade.

The Italians seemed to be scoring laborious successes against small British holding forces in Somaliland. The Italians got an extra taste of British sea power last week when a force that had penetrated to Zeila and was starting down the coast to Berbera was shelled from the sea.

But the African campaign, on the whole, to date adds up to the credit side for Italy. And if she can pick a fight with Greece, then keep British ships from Greek fueling bases, she will be contributing a real share to Axis victory.

The British Isles fought for life last week as an ever-increasing cloud of Nazi planes darkened the skies from Scapa Flow to Lands End. In each successive raid by the Germans, the R. A. F. rose to meet the invaders and lashed back with the fierce stubborness that is innately British.

All week long the attacking air armadas came, and with each trip they grew larger. Various accounts described the fighting planes as "30 miles long" and "over 6,000 planes in the air at once." Junkers like those shown above, Heinkels and Messerschmidts spread their ominous shadows fanwise over Britain. Aiding the R. A. F. were the coastal fortifications, like those shown at left, being inspected by Prime Minister Churchill. The week's end bought no let-up; instead, the crescendo of battle still seemed to be rising. And the outcome remained a question, neither side showing any noticeable weakening.

The Gallup Poll

32% of Voters 'Satisfied' With Defense Progress; 40% Not; 28% Don't Know

Majority of public favors transfer of destroyers to Britain. See Special Gallup Poll Result on Page 1, main news section.

By Dr. George Gallup
Director, American Institute of Public Opinion.

Princeton, N. J., Aug. 18.

A majority of the American people are not yet satisfied that sufficient progress is being made in rearming the United States.

That blunt fact emerges today at the conclusion of a new Nation-wide survey by the American Institute of Public Opinion. Between now and next November the question of whether adequate progress has been made is likely to become the Number 1 issue of the Presidential campaign.

The Institute survey reveals that at the present time the great majority of American voters are still in the dark as to whether the production of tanks—for instance—has been substantially increased or not.

GALLUP

Further, the survey shows, even among those with definite impressions about the progress of national defense, the prevailing opinion is that the rate of production for airplanes, tanks, warships and guns has been too slow.

"I'll not be satisfied that America is rearming in earnest," comments an Eastern voter, "until I can see our skies full of Army planes, and until I've seen some U. S. tanks rolling through my town."

While many Americans might be satisfied with less-dramatic evidence of U. S. rearmament, the survey found that only one person in three, on the average, thought sufficient progress had been made. No matter how much progress is actually made between now and November, political writers agree, it will be the voters' impression of that progress which will count at the polls.

Men and women in a Nation-wide cross-section were asked:

"Are you satisfied with the present rate of production of airplanes, tanks, warships and guns for our national defense program?"

Their answers were:

Satisfied With Present Rate	32%
Not Satisfied	40
Without Sufficient Information or Don't Know	28

The actual facts about American defense preparations are known, of course, to only a few Government and civilian authorities. An attempt was made last week to give the public a general resume of progress to date, when members of the President's Defense Council appeared on a Nation-wide radio hookup to answer prepared questions. President Roosevelt has also made a tour of New England defense points and announced that "we are getting into our stride" on national defense.

But a specific test of the public's information on the subject of tank production, for instance, still shows three voters in every four without definite knowledge. Voters were asked:

"Do you happen to know whether or not the production of tanks has already been substantially increased?"

Their replies were:

DON'T KNOW	75%
BELIEVE YES	19
BELIEVE NO	6

The public's impressions of defense progress have undergone a marked change in a month's time, for in mid-July, when the program had just been launched, an Institute study found a sizable majority "satisfied"

Mark Sullivan Says

Current Campaign Resembles 1916

To grasp one strangeness of this campaign, compare it with the other prewar one, the 1916 campaign of Wilson for a second term. The Wilson slogan—invented not by him but by the Democratic Party management—was, "He kept us out of war."

The implication which gave value to the slogan was, of course, that Wilson, reelected, would continue to keep us out of war. In that slogan the Democrats had joyous confidence. When Wilson won the election, the slogan was commonly given credit. (Ironically, within five months after he was elected, Wilson asked Congress to declare war on Germany, and Congress did.)

MARK SULLIVAN

Today the New Dealers do not know which of two popular impressions would be of most advantage to Mr. Roosevelt—whether "He will keep us out of war" or "He will take us toward war." The word "war," as here used, does not mean actual war: it means the same thing that Mr. Roosevelt meant when he spoke of helping the Allies to the extent of "measures short of war." The New Dealers cannot figure out whether Mr. Roosevelt would be helped or hurt by aggressiveness—greater aid to England, greater movement toward preparation for war, including conscription.

One hope of the New Dealers is this: That Mr. Roosevelt may be aggressive enough to make the dictators angry; that the dictators may resentfully begin to hurl epithets at Mr. Roosevelt and the United States, and that thereupon the American people will say:

"You can't talk that way about our President"—and will elect Mr. Roosevelt as a gesture of defiance toward the dictators.

On Mr. Roosevelt's part there has been a clear change of attitude. It began a little before the time he became a candidate for a third term. Up to about the middle of June, Mr. Roosevelt followed a course of almost reckless defiance toward dictators, culminating in his "stab-in-the-back" remark about Mussolini (in his Charlottesville, Va., speech in June).

Hand in hand with that, Mr. Roosevelt maintained an attitude of not only promising but actually giving help to the Allies. Publicly, to an extent that almost went beyond the authority of his office, he promised the Allies "the material resources of this Nation."

In action, Mr. Roosevelt went as far as his words. He initiated, or approved, and accepted responsibility for sending government planes to England by an indirect method. Planes belonging to our Army and Navy were turned in to plane manufacturers, on the theory that they were a kind of "trade-in" as part payment for new planes to be made for us later on. Going even further, Mr. Roosevelt accepted responsibility for transferring to England 20 small war vessels which were under construction for our Navy. That turned out to be contrary to law. Isolationists in Congress made a fuss about it and Mr. Roosevelt rescinded the action.

Change in President's Attitude

All that was in May and June. Thereafter, Mr. Roosevelt's attitude, so far as the public could observe, became one of inaction and silence. A recent proposal that some 50 American destroyers be turned over to the British navy received no public approval from Mr. Roosevelt—although the proposal came from, or was pushed by, persons usually supposed to have weight with him, and although, as it seemed to Washington, Mr. Roosevelt was strongly urged to put his shoulder behind the proposal. At one time effort was made to get Republican Candidate Willkie to indorse the proposal, on the theory that indorsement by Mr. Willkie might cause Mr. Roosevelt to indorse it, too.

On the other aspect of war, preparedness by the United States for future war anywhere, Mr. Roosevelt likewise seemed to become less urgent. For some ten days he avoided taking a position on the conscription bill, saying it was a matter for Congress to decide. Only after publicity was focused on Mr. Roosevelt's silence did he say that he favored the principle of selective conscription.

Reasons for Roosevelt's Retreat

Mr. Roosevelt's retreat from a policy of almost headlong helpfulness toward the Allies by both word and deed came in June. It could be accounted for by one of three conditions that arose about the same time. Mr. Roosevelt may have felt, after the collapse of France, that the Allies were beyond helping—although some of Mr. Roosevelt's advisers did not feel that way. Or Mr. Roosevelt may have felt that after Germany and Italy had shown themselves so powerful, the United States could not safely send material to England, that we might need all our strength for our own use at a time earlier than we had anticipated. Or Mr. Roosevelt may have been influenced by domestic politics; his mood may have been changed by the growing imminence of his own campaign for a third term.

What Mr. Willkie's attitude may be is not officially known at the moment this is written; presumably it will have emerged in his acceptance speech. Thereafter, dependent on what Mr. Willkie says, Mr. Roosevelt may feel more free either to take a position parallel with Mr. Willkie's, or contrasting with it.

But, even more than by Mr. Roosevelt or by Mr. Willkie, what happens to us about the war, and what we do about it, will be determined by Herr Hitler. He can do that which either will hurry us toward war, or make us less excited about it. Just as in 1916 Wilson could not or did not live up to the campaign implication that he would keep us out of war, just as Wilson's hand was forced by Germany—so today the attitude of either Mr. Roosevelt or Mr. Willkie, whichever is elected, may be changed by conditions created by Hitler and Germany.

Even before the election, during the coming ten weeks, an attempt by Hitler to invade England, followed by either success or failure, would have a strong effect on American thought and on our American campaign for the Presidency.

But History Marches On

Meanwhile, candidates may come and Presidents may go, but history marches on toward a destination in which America cannot possibly escape involvement.

Today, from Japan off the east coast of Asia, all the way across the northern part of that continent, and throughout the whole of Europe, there is a new form of society and government. It is a form devised in Russia in 1917 and, thereafter, slightly varied in the countries that have adopted it.

This new conception hates with deadly intensity the form of society and government still practiced by Britain and the United States. Against these two countries are hurled the bitterest epithets that Hitler, Stalin and Mussolini can devise. They know that their totalitarian form of society and government cannot live in a divided world—totalitarian government must take in the whole of the world or fail to live.

Already entrenched in substantially the whole of Europe and most of Asia, they are advancing in the rest of Asia and in Africa. The four great divisions of totalitarian government—Japan, Russia, Germany and Italy—are an effective union in the attempt to conquer Britain. If Britain falls, there will remain only the United States to resist the totalitarian tide.

"The American Presidency"

Professor Laski's Study Is a Subtle And Persuasive Political Tract

By Felix Morley

IN THE SPRING of 1939 Prof. Harold J. Laski, the eminent English political scientist, delivered a course of lectures at Indiana University, the alma mater of Wendell Willkie and close to where he yesterday formally accepted the Republican nomination for the Presidency. Certainly Prof. Laski had no anticipation of this development when he selected "The American Presidency" as the subject of his course. Otherwise he would not have told his audience, forgetting Mr. Landon and failing to foresee Mr. Willkie, that "no Presidential candidate in the whole record has been a business man."

Mr. Laski has now published these lectures, with certain alterations, in book form. The work, internal evidence indicates, was finished just a year ago, on the eve of the outbreak of the war in Europe. It was the hope of the author, he says in his preface, that "this little book may stimulate British students to realize something of the interest and fascination of American history and politics." Under existing circumstances, both in Great Britain and over here, Mr. Laski's timely study is likely to have the wider reading in this country.

It may be surmised that this outcome was also a very definite hope, although unvoiced, on the part of Mr. Laski. For what he has written is only in part the "interpretation" of the American Presidency which he claims this book to be. It may more accurately be defined as a very able and persuasive political tract, calculated to be of great assistance to the reelection of President Roosevelt, whom Mr. Laski admires fervently.

Edward J. Flynn, the much-bedevilled successor of Jim Farley, will miss a bet if he fails to seize the opportunity which Mr. Laski's new book affords. It is much more effective Roosevelt propaganda than the now notorious campaign book of the Democratic National Committee. It cannot be condemned under the Hatch Act and, as a good start, it has already been mailed out to thousands of innocent subscribers as the July selection of the "Book-of-the-Month Club."

Harold Laski

II

MR. LASKI'S ATTACK on the "mechanical formula" which has so far prevented a third term for any President is only one illustration of the suitability of this book for campaign purposes. To its author it seems "a grievous waste of human resources to put a President on the shelf mainly because, for private reasons, George Washington decided to serve for two terms only." Jefferson, Mr. Laski suggests, might also have had a third term had he desired it. But, rather curiously, this English commentator fails to quote—or even mention—Jefferson's ringing statement that "no pretext should ever be permitted to dispense" with the two-term limit.

For the most part, however, Mr. Laski's indorsement of the Roosevelt candidacy is more subtle, not less so because occasionally there is a little mild criticism of the present occupant of the White House.

The effort to pack the Supreme Court, Mr. Laski concedes, was "too ingenious, both in concept and in mechanism" for the average American to appreciate. He also suggests that there would have been less resentment towards "the remarkable work" of Tommy Corcoran and Ben Cohen if there had been some "public definition of their function." And he recalls that "for a brief period," at the outset of the New Deal, "a Prof. Warren, whose specialism was agriculture, persuaded President Franklin Roosevelt to embark upon a disastrous currency experiment of immense magnitude."

Such procedural errors, however, serve to emphasize rather than detract from the stature of Mr. Laski's candidate. The author's really scathing criticism is reserved for those "forces of privilege" which "have greeted a body of legislation in general as mild as that of the Liberal government of 1906 in England as though it were inaugurating an epoch of red revolution."

That comment is neither scholarly nor accurate. It is of a piece with such smart-alec wisecracks as "Mr. Coolidge adored rich men because they were rich." And observations by Mr. Laski, in this vein are sufficiently prevalent to justify the conclusion that his essentially journalistic production—it lacks even an index—was pushed into an American edition in the expectation that its ostensibly non-partisan viewpoint would influence independent voters between now and November. Indeed it is permissible to wonder whether there would have been any American edition of this book if Mr. Roosevelt had declined nomination.

III

THERE IS, HOWEVER, a criticism more serious than that of its obvious partisanship to be made concerning Mr. Laski's "interpretation" of "The American Presidency." This criticism centers on the general line of solution which he proposes for malaise and inefficiency in the American form of government. And criticism here is the more necessary because Mr. Laski's prescription is likely to be given careful attention by many. He has a real, though diminishing, reputation as a political scientist and is all too frequently accepted as being the "liberal" thinker which he claims to be.

To Huey Long is attributed the remark that if America ever goes Fascist it will be the work of anti-Fascists. That aphorism comes irresistibly to mind in reading "The American Presidency."

In spite of his strongly Marxist bent, very carefully disguised in this volume, Mr. Laski is regarded by many as a die-hard opponent of the principles for which Hitler and Mussolini stand. Yet his criticisms of our system of government are almost precisely those which these dictators would make if they were sufficiently interested in the American scheme. Indeed one may easily imagine the Fuehrer registering strong approbation for Laski's conclusion that "to live creatively" a nation "must discipline itself to trust, in the grand manner, the leaders of its choice."

Both of the fundamental safeguards against establishment of an American dictatorship are called in question by Mr. Laski in this book. The Federal system, preserving States rights against progressive inroads by the central government, he regards as obsolete. The system of checks and balances seems to him incompatible with what he is pleased to call the proper relation" between executive, legislature and judiciary. And this "proper relation," we are given clearly to understand, is one in which the President, continuing in office for as long as he can command popular support, would be supreme.

Mr. Laski is a subtle propagandist. But sometimes he is also, as he said of President Roosevelt, "too ingenious." He seeks to lull his American readers by telling them that "the fear of Caesarism," offered by critics of the third term, "omits the vital fact that the whole framework of the American scheme of government is utterly incompatible with Caesarism." That is fortunately true. But the vital fact soft-pedaled by Mr. Laski is that he would gladly undermine the protective framework as it now exists.

IV

THE REALLY SUBVERSIVE quality of this book is not disguished by the fact that Mr. Laski comes out categorically for only a small number of relatively minor reforms. In his arguments for the item veto, for depriving Congress of the power to make extra-budgetary appropriations, for ending the practice of "senatorial courtesy," Mr. Laski will have the support of every disinterested student of government. But it was not to advocate these highly desirable reforms that this book was written. The underlying argument is for the development in this country of what the author calls "positive" government. "Positive," as used by Mr. Laski, seems a pleasant euphemism for totalitarian.

As an objective English student of American institutions Mr. Laski is scarcely comparable with James Bryce. He does not, however, hesitate to criticize the latter commentator as subject to the prejudices of "a Gladstonian liberal." This brings to mind an observation at the close of Bryce's chapter on "Presidential Powers and Duties." in his famous "American Commonwealth." Mr. Bryce, too, had dismissed the fear that a third term could lead to Caesarism in this country so long as the basic structure of our government remains unchanged. But he added:

A bold President who knew himself to be supported by a majority in the country might be tempted to override the law, and deprive the minority of the protection which the law affords it. He might be a tyrant, not against the masses, but with the masses. But nothing in the present state of American politics gives weight to such apprehensions.

There was nothing to give weight to such apprehensions when Bryce first voiced them, over 50 years ago. There is, unfortunately, much to give weight to those fears today. And Mr. Laski does not diminish their substance when he concludes that the President of the United States should be given powers even greater, more autocratic and more uncontrollable than those he already possesses.

Such increase of power, says Mr. Laski, "must be given democratically" and "must be exercised democratically." The qualifications will fool nobody who realizes that all of Hitler's powers sprang from a democratic gift and that they are, according to his lights, exercised democratically in accordance with what the German masses undoubtedly regard as their best interests.

Ernest Lindley Says

The Palace Guard Is Changing Again

By political custom the men who inspire and manage a campaign for a Presidential nomination are rewarded with positions of privilege and trust in the nominee's circle of advisers. By this test, the men who should be more thoroughly entrenched than ever before in President Roosevelt's inner circle are Tommy Corcoran, Harold L. Ickes and Harry Hopkins. They were the President's chief lieutenants in the ill-fated attempt to "purge" the party in 1938. Their failure in an attempt for which their own bad judgment was partly responsible, might well have prompted the President to turn elsewhere for political advice and managerial assistance. Instead, it seemed only to make him rely on them more exclusively.

ERNEST LINDLEY

They became the prime movers in the third-term movement. Corcoran started it in 1938, even before the end of the "purge." In this effort they were successful, and so presumably entitled to continue as the President's chief political advisers and assistants.

But what is happening?

Corcoran has gone off on a vacation. Whether he will return to his haunts in Washington is doubtful. Close friends say that he merely has not decided how he can be most useful to the President during the campaign. They suggest that he may resign from the Government to devote himself to practical political work during the next few months. Where and in what capacity are matters for speculation. Other sources close to the White House assert, however, that Tommy is "gone for good," and that he will neither return to the Government nor be given any political assignment by the President.

That Corcoran's relations with the White House were no longer so intimate as they once were was reported in this column several weeks ago. There is evidence now that the President has become extremely annoyed with his one-time favorite.

Corcoran's Prestige Waning

That Corcoran is out, beyond redemption, cannot be definitely stated, however. He has suffered other periods of partial eclipse and come back again when his talents were needed. But at present he does not enjoy the position and prestige which one might expect to accrue to the first and most persistent agitator for a third term, and the man who practically took over Jim Farley's job for almost two years.

The first cabinet member to demand publicly a third term was Harold L. Ickes. He led the crusade, by speech and by magazine articles. When the time came he strove, with some success, to straighten out several political tangles which threatened to prevent the selection of loyal third-term advocates as delegates to the national convention.

As the most vigorous cabinet sponsor of the third term, Mr. Ickes might have felt—and probably did feel—entitled to share the President's confidence concerning his plans for the national convention, and to take an active hand in the management of the third term draft in Chicago. But when Mr. Ickes arrived in Chicago, at the Hotel Stevens, he found his cabinet colleague, Harry Hopkins, already established across the street at the Blackstone, with a direct telephone connection with the White House. The convention was managed from Mr. Hopkins' suite, and most of the important messages to and from the White House went through him.

The climax for Mr. Ickes was, I imagine, the nomination of Henry Wallace, for whom he has no overwhelming affection. If the President had wanted a man who could trade verbal blows with Wendell Willkie and who would be recognized throughout the country as a New Dealer, where could he have found a better one than Harold Ickes? Wallace was so little of a New Dealer—by the test of the Corcoran school—that in 1938 he had firmly refused to assist in the "purge," even at the request of the President. And he had been so poorly attuned to the rhythm of the third term movement that when he finally said that the country needed Roosevelt again it was at a moment when the President felt such sentiments, publicly expressed, were embarrassing, and had Wallace publicly reproved by Steve Early.

It was not until this week that the President got around to discussing his campaign plans privately with Ickes. One result was that Ickes was authorized to take to the air next Monday night to reply to Wendell Willkie's acceptance speech. There is nothing like a chance to make a radio speech—especialy one in reply to Willkie—to appease Harold Ickes.

Chance To Talk Appeases Ickes

Harry Hopkins is on the chummiest terms with the President. He has been living at the White House—or at Hyde Park, or within talking distance of the President, wherever he has been—for several months. The President is extremely fond of him, and this affection is overwhelmingly reciprocated.

Having managed the Chicago convention, producing not only the renomination of the President by technical acclamation, but the nomination of Wallace, Hopkins might have been expected, by political custom, to be the real political boss of the current Democratic campaign. But if he had any such expectation it was promptly obliterated by Edward J. Flynn, the new chairman of the Democratic National Committee. Flynn took this job on the express condition that he himself was to have a free hand in the management of the party during the campaign, and that in all matters requiring the advice of the President, Flynn would deal directly with him—not with any of the White House aides or advisers.

Hopkins probably will surrender also his cabinet portfolio in the near future. This is at his own insistence. While his health has improved, he has not been able to give much time to the Department of Commerce. In recent months he has been most useful as a general handy-man around the White House.

Hopkins Wants To Reign

Repeatedly he has submitted orally his resignation as Secretary of Commerce. He feels that the President could strengthen himself politically by appointing another man to this post. Some time ago the job was promised, at least half-way, to Jesse H. Jones, Federal Loan Administrator. Louis Johnson, former Assistant Secretary of War, has been offered the post of Undersecretary of Commerce, but has not yet accepted it. Whether the President would strengthen himself materially by shifting Jones from one post in his Administration to another is doubted by some of his advisers—although none doubts that Jones has earned the distinction of a full cabinet position.

Hopkins may become an assistant to the President, taking a reduction in official position and salary. Or he may retire from the Government altogether. Whatever he does, he will remain at the President's right hand. But publicly and officially he does not enjoy the prestige which one might expect to flow more or less automatically from the consummation of a precedent-shattering third-term nomination.

No less precedent-shattering than the third-term nomination is the way in which the men who were chiefly responsible for bringing it about are being shoved into the background, instead of being accorded the glory and continuing responsibility which customarily are the rewards to the managers of a successful political enterprise. It is tragic or comic, depending on your viewpoint. At least it is queer.

Election Casts Its Shadow Over Conscription Debate

By Joseph Driscoll.

The coming Presidential election in November is throwing a heavy shadow over the current Congressional debate on the Burke - Wadsworth compulsory military training bill and on the whole national defense picture. Already it is being suggested that the Roosevelt Administration is not too anxious to draft hundreds of thousands of young American men shortly before the election and would prefer to leave that thankless job until after the votes are counted and no longer can be influenced by political and national defense developments.

Only the other day Brig. Gen. William E. Shedd, assistant chief of staff, disclosed that the Army has abandoned plans to have 900,000 men in uniform by October 1 as originally scheduled, and that under revised plans the Army does not expect to reach the 900,000-strength figure until January 1.

What caused this revision of plans involving a delay of three months on such an important national defense expansion. Gen. Shedd himself attributed it to delay in adopting the Burke-Wadsworth bill. This excuse was denounced as outrageous by Senators who pointed out that the Senate at that moment was only in its third day of formal debate on the bill—a debate which is expected to end next week. Surely, they argued, a debate extending over two or even three weeks cannot be blamed for a three-months' delay in Army expansion schedules.

The real reason and excuse for the delay is the November election, according to that anti-New Deal Democrat from Missouri, Senator Bennett Champ Clark, who said:

"As a matter of fact, everyone knows, and everyone has known all the time, that some excuse would be found for postponing the operation of the draft, because, as many inept things as this Administration has done, nothing in the whole history of it would indicate that they were going to be so inept as to have hundreds of thousands of mothers going down to the stations kissing their boys good-by to go off to the Army in time of peace within three or four weeks before election."

Senator Robert A. Taft (Republican), of Ohio, agreed with Senator Clark and gives a further reason for the delay—that being the Army's own unpreparedness to provide accommodations and equipment for the enormous manpower to be drafted under the terms of the Burke-Wadsworth bill, which would make 12,000,000 men between the ages of 21 and 31 subject to registration for one year's military training with the Army. Allowing exemptions for physical disabilities, dependents and conscientious objections, it is estimated that about 4,500,000 of the 12,000,000 would eventually be called up for training. Senator Taft does not believe the Army will be ready to call anyone under the draft by October 15. He recalls that in 1917 the draft law was passed on May 20 and that the registration date was set for June 5, but that the Army did not actually get any draftees into camp until September, four months from the time the bill was passed. If the present Senate passes the pending bill on August 20, the same theory, says Senator Taft, it will be December before the Army could actually get any of the men under the draft.

Defeated in his race for the Republican Presidential nomination, Senator Taft is able to speak his mind freely on such controversial issues as a peacetime draft of manpower. So is Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg, Republican, of Michigan, who also ran for the Republican Presidential nomination at the Philadelphia convention. Both have spoken out against the draft.

Unfortunately for President Roosevelt, he has been weighed down by the third-term nomination "forced" upon him at the Chicago convention. Although he repeatedly indorsed the principle of selective service, he carefully refrained week after week from stamping his approval upon the Burke-Wadsworth bill. Friends of the bill said privately that the President was on their side but had to proceed cautiously because of the approaching election. They were hopeful he might take encouragement from the overwhelming vote in the House of Representatives on Thursday, ratifying the Senate-approved bill giving the President the full authority he requested to mobilize 360,000 National Guardsmen and Army reservists for intensive training with the Army and for service if necessary anywhere in the Western Hemisphere and American territories and possessions, including the Philippines.

Even if President Roosevelt never thinks of national defense in relation to his own chances in November, it is certain that the Senate debaters do. Senator Lister Hill, Democrat, of Alabama, who delivered the speech placing Mr. Roosevelt's name in nomination at Chicago, recently reminded his colleagues that George Washington sent to Congress in his time recommendations for national defense containing the "very principle" of the Burke-Wadsworth bill.

Although President Washington refused a third term, and thereby started, unwittingly or otherwise, the two-term tradition which Mr. Roosevelt has resolved to smash, Senator Hill found some encouragement for his protege in the White House. Paraphrasing Washington, the Alabama Senator told his colleagues:

"George Washington said that if there was a grave emergency in this country they might well have a third term in the Presidency, and I am delighted we are going to have a third time."

"We may have it but we may not; that is yet to be decided by the people," rejoined Senator Burton K. Wheler (Democrat), of Montana.

The shadow of the election cut across the debate again when Senator Claude Pepper (Democrat), of Florida, was defending his proposal to confer upon the President "full wartime power." Denying this was a move to make President Roosevelt a wartime dictator in peacetime, Senator Pepper intimated he would be willing to do as much for Wendell L. Willkie should he be elected President next November. As Senator Pepper explained it:

"I will say that with the Congress in session and able to revoke any power it may bestow at any time, or to alter it as circumstances may require, I am perfectly willing to vest the exercise of such power in the people's President, whether he be Roosevelt, Willkie, or anybody else, until the emergency is over. I assume that the President will not do a foolish thing, and I assume that if he attempted to do a foolish thing Congress would not permit him to do it. If it is a question of making a choice between being afraid that he would not do enough, and afraid that he would do too much to defend America in the emergency, I will take a chance on the abuse of power."

The Presidential Campaign of 1940 Is On; Willkie Challenges F.D.R. to Come Out and Fight

If Franklin Roosevelt accepts the challenge flung down by Wendell Willkie in Elwood yesterday, the 1940 electorate will be treated to one of the greatest debates in American political history.

It all depends on the President now. The Chief Executive has said he has neither "the time nor the inclination to engage in purely political debate," and has been devoting his attention to national defense progress, making frequent inspection trips to Army, Navy and air bases. But Willkie's speech, together with pressure from Democratic politicians for more Roosevelt oratory, may change his mind.

And if these two dynamic speakers cross swords on the major issues of the day, the 1940 campaign should be one of the most colorful in the history of United States politics.

Will the President Take the Republican Nominee's Dare? Democrats Want Him to Fight It Out

By Edward T. Folliard.

Elwood, Ind., Aug. 17.—So far as Wendell Willkie is concerned, the Presidential campaign of 1940 is on.

In perhaps the most forthright acceptance speech ever delivered by a Republican nominee, the 48-year-old Hoosier this afternoon outlined his political philosophy, raked President Roosevelt's foreign and domestic policies and wound up by challenging the Chief Magistrate to cross swords with him on "public platforms in various parts of the country."

Will President Roosevelt accept this challenge to joint debate?

From this distance, the chances would seem all against it, bold and daring a man as Franklin D. Roosevelt has shown himself to be.

As Willkie recalled before the great shirt-sleeved multitude at Calloway Park today, the President, in his acceptance speech to the Chicago Convention, said he did not have "either the time or the inclination to engage in purely political debate."

Thus far about all that President Roosevelt has said in a political way since he received the tradition - shattering third - term nomination last month was his bitter remark about two of his erstwhile lieutenants. When Lewis Douglas, the original New Deal director of the budget, and John Hanes, a former Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, announced that they would support Willkie, Mr. Roosevelt said that they seemed to be more concerned about money than humanity.

In the intervening weeks, the President has spent most of his time emphasizing his devotion to the national defense program, making trips of inspection to Navy yards and Army posts all along the Eastern seaboard. During the New England tour of inspection, when a reporter asked him to comment on the New Hampshire gubernatorial fight, President Roosevelt was reported to have said:

"Good Lord, can't you ever forget politics?"

Whatever may have been in President Roosevelt's mind as he set out on his series of inspections—and the Willkie people credit him with being sincerely devoted to the Army and the Navy—Republican strategists nevertheless look upon these much publicized tours as a distinct form of campaigning.

Some of the Democrats in Congress concede this, but they don't think it is enough. They have been clamoring for the President to get out and campaign in the traditional fashion, and to accept Willkie's earlier challenge to swap blows with him.

In view of Willkie's broadside this afternoon, the agitation on Capitol Hill probably will mount, and unless the fighting instincts of F. D. R. have diminished the agitation will not be in vain.

Up until today, Willkie also has been under pressure from party members, but for a diametrically opposite reason. Some G. O. P. strategists—or would-be strategists—think Willkie is prone to talk too much. They are afraid he will talk himself into trouble.

Willkie Will Talk Anywhere, Anytime

Willkie will talk at the drop of a hat; that is true. In Philadelphia, when he was hunting for delegates, he got up on a chair or a table 20 times a day to tell people what he thought, what he stood for.

He hasn't changed any in the seven weeks since he was nominated. A crowd of well-wishers means only one thing to Willkie—a speech, or, at least, a talk. Let him land at an airport and see a crowd, and he will climb up on a rail and cut loose. If the crowd yells for Mrs. Willkie, he will talk a little more, explaining that he does the public speaking for the Willkie family.

There is no indication that Willkie is going to stop talking, and some of the smarter people in his entourage pray that he doesn't.

"Why should he?" one of them asked last night. "For Willkie to put a gag on, to duck, or go in for weasel words, would be to go out of character.

"He believes that the American people want candor in this campaign, an honest answer to the things that are bothering them, and he proposes to give them that.

"He has been talking now for seven weeks, and I have yet to hear him say the wrong thing. He seems to have an instinct for saying the right thing, and I think you will admit that he has landed some telling blows.

"Do you remember his remark after Roosevelt made his acceptance speech and tried to give the impression that he was making a great sacrifice. Willkie said he made no pretense to noble motives in seeking the Presidency. He said he wanted it and wanted it badly because he had some convictions he wanted to translate into action.

"The New Dealers, we all know, were ready to make Willkie out as a utilities candidate financed by big business. Willkie has struck first. He has shown up the corrupt political machines in the big cities that are backing Roosevelt, and has put Ed Flynn on the defensive in the matter of campaign funds."

Willkie's neatest move so far, in the view of those traveling with him, was his handling of Herbert Hoover when the latter visited him at Colorado Springs. Willkie issued a particularly newsworthy statement that day, thus overshadowing the presence of "the Chief." In various other ways, he managed to keep Hoover in the background, without being rude about it.

The Republican Party that Willkie is fashioning bears little resemblance to the party that once was dominated by the Hoovers, the Watsons, and the Smoots.

Will Willkie bloom and then fade before the summer is over? In Chicago last month, the New Dealers were betting that he would. But here in ebullient Elwood, they not only do not think that; they think that he will get stronger and stronger as the summer friends into fall and the voters get ready to cast their ballots.

They think—nay, they are thoroughly convinced that he will continue to be a man "ahead of a trend."

The President keeps his attention fixed on national defense—inspecting air and ground forces at Langley Field, Va.

Willkie never misses a chance for a speech—he has been talking steadily for seven weeks, and he expects to keep right on until election day.

Willkie enjoys campaigning—crowds of well-wishers like this keep him in fighting trim.

Third Term Arguments Today Sound Like Echo Of Bitter 1880 Campaign

Faded books and pamphlets dealing with the third-term controversy of 1880 are much in demand on Capitol Hill as the 1940 campaign gets under way.

Friends and foe of a third term for President Roosevelt are preparing to echo the arbguments that were made for and against a third term for Ulysses S. Grant, with perhaps a few variations occasioned by Adolf Hitler and the European War.

The best collection of third-term literature in Congress belongs to Representative Joseph B. Shannon (Democrat), of Missouri. For years the Kansas City statesman has been gathering artitcles and pamphlets on the question, scouring book stores and libraries with an avidity that another man might show in running down rare coins or stamps.

In his search for pro and con arguments, Shannon struck a rich mine in the files of the old North American Review. Who started the controversy in this publication is not clear, but once started it continued for many issues in the year 1880.

Ulysses S. Grant had served two terms, from 1869 to 1877. He was willing to serve a third consecutive term, but his chances were exploded when the House on December 15, 1875, adopted the oft-quoted Springer resolution saying that any departure from the two-term tradition "would be unwise, unpatriotic, and fraught with peril to our free institutions."

Having yielded the Presidency to Rutherford B. Hayes, Grant was an eager candidate for a third-term nomination in 1880. All that winter and spring, in advance of the Republican National Convention, the controversy raged.

Two of the ablest and most distinguished disputants were Timothy Otis Howe, a Wisconsin Republican, and Jeremiah Sullivan Black, a Pennsylvania Democrat. Both were former judges and both served as Cabinet officers. Howe as Postmaster General in the Administration of President Arthur and Black as Attorney General and Secretary of State in the Administration of President Buchanan.

Their arguments in the North American Review in that angry year of 1880 probably embraced all that was to be said at the time for and against a third Presidential term, and they doubtless will be echoed many times in this campaign of 1940.

Judge Howe said that the agitation against a third term for Gen. Grant was "senseless clamor." He then quoted the Springer resolution of 1875 so that he could quickly damn it and dispose of it. Representative Springer was a Democrat from Illinois, and his resolution read as follows:

"Resolved, That in the opinion of this House the precedent established by Washington and other Presidents of the United States, in retiring from the Presidential office after their second term, has become, by universal concurrence, a part of our republican system of government, and that any departure from this time-honored custom would be unwise, unpatriotic, and fraught with peril to our free institutions."

The resolution was adopted by a House vote of 233 to 18.

Judge Howe said that the Springer resolution was a "champion piece of charlatanry," and a "wanton insult to our common sense." Reminding the country of how fortunate it was to have Gen. Grant available for another term in the White House, he said:

"It is much to be desired that the world may not again see true Republicans scared by a senseless clamor into putting lighted candles in their caps, after the manner of miners, and going down into subterranean depths to quarry out a President, while the foremost man of his age stands upon the mountain top."

"It may be said that Gen. Washington chose to retire at the end of his second term. The fact was so; but it is difficult to see how Gen. Washington's refusal, in the latter part of the last century, to serve a third term, should debar the people, in the latter part of this century and the next, from choosing a man a third time who will serve."

Judge Howe pointed out that Washington's reasons for retiring were personal, not patriotic. He was tired and he wanted to go down to Mount Vernon and relax.

Judge Howe had to admit that Jefferson had "furnished a precedent more to the purpose." The legislatures of several States had urged President Jefferson to accept a third term, but Jefferson declined, saying:

"If some termination to the services of the Chief Magistrate be not fixed by the Constitution, or supplied by practice, his office, nominally for years, will, in fact, become for life, and history shows how easily that degenerates into an inheritance.

"Believing that a representative government, responsible at short periods of election, is that which produces the greatest sum of happiness to mankind, I feel it a duty to do no act which shall essentially impair that principle, and I should unwillingly be the person who, disregarding the sound precedent set by an illustrious predecessor, should furnish the first example of prolongation beyond the second te[illegible] of office . . ."

Jefferson Couldn't Have Been Elected?

But, he quickly added, Jefferson could have offered a better reason for not trying for a third term.

"That better reason was," he said, "that he could not be elected to a third term!"

Judge Howe then asserted that there were many States which had not joined in the Jefferson "boom," enough in fact to prevent his reelection.

Summing up his argument, Judge Howe said:

"To tell rational creatures that 'free institutions' are imperiled by the reelection of one who for eight years had proved a faithful Magistrate, but are insured by the election of one who has never been proved at all, seems to be the extreme of audacity.

"That is to say, that our institutions would have been endangered by the election of George Washington to a third term, but were preserved by the election of John Adams; that is to say, that our republican system would have been threatened by a third election of James Madison or Andrew Jackson but was preserved by the fortunate election of James Monroe and Martin Van Buren.

"If experience teaches anything, it is that the longer a public servant has been faithful, the surer he is to be faithful. That is as true of the First Magistrate as of any subaltern; as true of the head of the Nation as of the head of a bureau.

Judge Jeremiah Sullivan Black, his Scotch-Irish blood at pretty close to boiling point, made a resounding answer to Judge Howe in a subsequent issue of the North American Review.

He granted that there was no law against a third term, but he insisted that the sentiment against a third term was even stronger than a constitutional interdict. Referring to the Springer resolution of 1875, Black said:

"When the Romans desired to honor a deceased benefactor, they went up to the Capitol and publicly crowned his statue with laurels; the Representatives of the American people, in December, 1875, did for Washington and Madison what was more than equivalent—they solemnly and with one voice commended their example as worthy of all imitation.

Black then took up Howe's statement that Washington's reason for retiring was personal and not patriotic, and Howe's citation of Washington's remark that he "would rather be on his farm than be made emperor of the world."

"A man of such sentiments, Mr. Howe thinks, ought not to influence the behavior of another who has no taste for agriculture, and he professes his total inability to see why the refusal of a third term by Washington, who did not want it, should be quoted nearly a century later against Grant, who does not want it very much.

Judge Black then took up Howe's arguments with respect to Jefferson, first the contention that Jefferson, by refusing to run for a third term, had restricted the free choice of the people, and, second, his statement that Jefferson could not have been reelected, anyway.

"If this oracular judgment be cor-

Russell Davenport, Willkie's 'Idea Man,' Is Poet, Philosopher and Politician

By S. F. Porter

RUSSELL WHEELER DAVENPORT never would have quit his job as Fortune Magazine's managing editor to promote Wendell Willkie for President had Willkie been a satisfactory weekend guest.

It happened last August. Davenport had met Willkie just once at a Fortune Round Table Conference on unemployment and had casually invited him for a weekend at his home, in Norwalk, Conn., never thinking Willkie would accept.

But Willkie did, at the last minute, too, throwing Davenport into a panic.

"I didn't belong to a golf club," he says, "but I wangled a special golf pass for the week-end. I had the tennis court rolled and my sailboat spruced up. Everything was shipshape.

"Then he came, and first thing, he seized every newspaper in the house. And all he did was sit and read the newspapers and talk. He scarcely moved from his chair in the living room during the entire week-end."

That was how it started. Davenport, sitting, smoking cigarettes incessantly, drinking quarts of coffee, taking gulps from a bottle of stomach medicine—and talking. Willkie, sitting, running his hands through his hair, shaking his finger to emphasize a point—and talking.

They argued up and down the country together: about Davenport's pet subject, individual liberty; about ways to release the creative forces of business; about how to make this country safe and prosperous again. Davenport wrote notes for a book on liberty and Willkie wrote notes on politics.

And finally Davenport saw an article Willkie had written called "We, the People," grabbed it before any other magazine editor had a chance at it, printed it in the April issue of Fortune along with an editorial on the man's qualifications. The article was reprinted by the thousand in pamphlet form, and it set off the Willkie boom for President.

You know the rest—how a group of political neophytes managed without money, without an established program and, at first, without even authorization by its candidate; how that whirlwind fight at Philadelphia resulted in one of the greatest upsets in American political history.

DAVENPORT'S 41 years have been crowded with events like that, unconventional, unexpected. He's in big politics now—personal representative and strategist for the Republican Presidential nominee. Davenport is the liaison between Willkie and the Republican Party's committees, the coordinator of all campaign activities that fall outside the sphere of the party's formal machinery. He is the man upon whom Willkie relies for guidance in his relations with the public, the press, the party itself—the one person with whom the Presidential candidate "bats all ideas back and forth."

It's a top-notch job and maybe, now that Davenport has tried it, he'll stay in politics.

Maybe, but there is no predicting the future of this human dynamo.

He might have been a poet, for instance. He started out to be. He wrote one longish poem, "California Spring," and saw it published; and then he worked years on a group of short love poems.

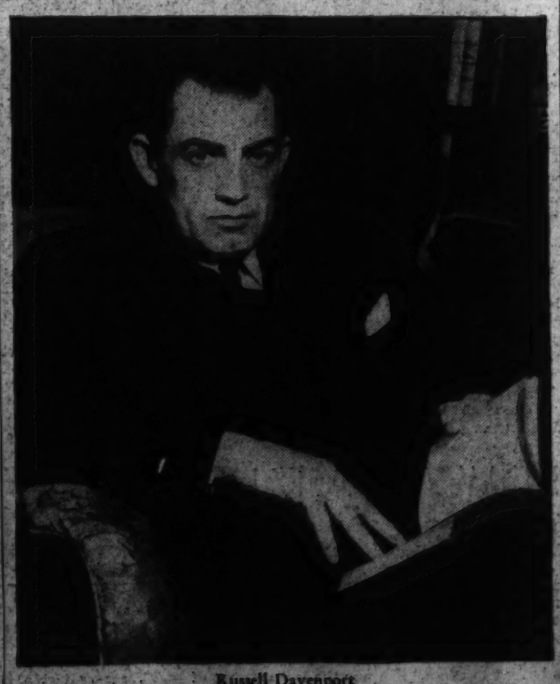
Finally the poems were finished, and one day Davenport wrapped his masterpieces carefully, hailed a taxi and set off for an appointment with a potential publisher. But when he arrived at his destination the poems were gone. He had left them in the taxi, and neither they nor the cab ever was found again.

He might have been a philosopher, for while at Yale he honored in philosophy and ethics. He might have been an author, and he did write several stories and one novel, "Through Traffic," published in 1929. But, in his words, it was "a flop and wretched affair," and thereafter he figured novel writing was too much of a luxury.

But one thing about that book. It was filled with figures, dealt with business and real estate and it predicted the business collapse.

Davenport was fiddling around with figures and industry years before he came to Fortune, the businessman's plush magazine. In fact, industry always has been a "Davenport mania," and he planned that novel as the first of a series of books having as heroes imaginary or real businessmen.

Now he says, "I've found a real hero and I'm not writing a book."



Russell Davenport

AS a matter of fact, Willkie is more than a hero to Davenport. He's a symbol, "the embodiment of the common-sense characteristics that have made the American people great."

"The ideals for which Willkie stands must be recaptured by this country," he believes. "They are the American ideals, the progressive liberal principles. Putting the fate of the United States into the hands of government is not a progressive act. On the contrary, Government control reflects a reactionary philosophy with which Willkie has no sympathy."

And above all Davenport admires "Willkie's courage, his independence and fight." No doubt about it, if Davenport ever gets around to writing that next book, he'll have his hero.

DAVENPORT is an exceedingly friendly person, and when he smiles—which he does frequently—his pale green eyes sparkle and there is a suggestion of dimples in his smooth-shaven face. There's something completely disarming about this man with the mussed tan-brown hair, big ears and expensive suits that are rarely pressed and never fit. His conversation is a peculiar mixture of slang, when talking about himself or other people, and of perfectly phrased sentences when discussing liberty, democracy or freedom of enterprise. He'll quote the Bible or a line out of Herbert Spencer at the drop of a hat.

Once he starts talking to a visitor he sits back and relaxes, for he's convinced he can't work in the daytime anyway. "Too many telephone calls and interruptions." So he follows the habits of the mole, works mostly at night, drives his assistants crazy by coming to work at midnight with a large brief case crammed with rush orders.

A poet's pencil and a physicist's brain, a talent for writing and a talent for business are facets of Davenport's character that shine through the years, clashing, merging, clashing and merging again. It makes sense only when you peer into the background of his life.

Davenport's father was a vice president of Bethlehem Steel Co., his mother, a Philadelphia belle who shocked the main line conservatives by teaching school in the daytime and dancing at debutante parties until the last note of the music had died away at night. At 78, his mother still is managing her leather goods shop in Philadelphia and traveling to New York at least once a week to attend to her wholesale business.

Russell was born in Bethlehem, Pa., into one of the most conservative business and social groups in the country. But at 12 came the pneumonia and the family moved to Santa Barbara, Calif., for the milder climate.

THAT was the first of the Russell Davenport breaks with tradition, for the Davenport family of Santa Barbara wasn't the same as the Davenport family of Philadelphia. Not that it bothered the family's "bad little brother." It was at the Thacher School of Ojai, Calif., that Davenport picked up the nickname of "Mitch" and it may or may not be significant that Penrod's reaction to "Mitchy-Mitch," his sweetheart's little brother was "when He made pretty girls, why couldn't He have left out their little brothers!"

Anyway, just as Thacher finished with Russell—or perhaps Russell finished with Thacher—the United States entered the World War. He was 17.

They wouldn't accept him as an aviator because of his defective hearing, so he tried some lip reading and obtained a job as an ambulance driver.

Davenport is one of the few men who received the Croix de

Canada Seeks Defense Pact With U. S.

Would Permit Establishment Of American Naval Bases in Country

By D. M. Halliday

Copyright by New York Tribune, Inc.

Toronto, Aug. 17.—Official reticence on a proposed mutual defense between Canada and the United States continues in Ottawa, but it is assumed that confidential information on defense plans and projects is being constantly exchanged.

Prime Minister Mackenzie King told the House of the controversy it would probably arouse in the United States, but he announced as long ago as February, 1939, that there had been an exchange of information on the defense plans of the two countries. At that time he noted that "there has been nothing that could have the semblance of a commitment."

It is hinted, however, in Ottawa that Canada would be receptive to such negotiations, and strong editorial support has been given the suggestion.

Constitutionally, there is no bar on either side. Canada, although a member of the British Commonwealth of Nations, is also a sovereign nation, free to negotiate treaties which are not binding on other members of the commonwealth. It is not likely that Canada would conclude a defense agreement without officially notifying Great Britain, but no objection from London is foreseen.

If such a mutual defense pact were to be realized, it is believed probable that the establishment of a United States naval base at Halifax, or some other point in Nova Scotia or enlargement of existing facilities at Halifax, and completion of the highway between the United States and Alaska through British Columbia and the Yukon would be major provisions.

Canadians Defend Atlantic Islands

Also salient in the strategic interests of the two countries is the defense of Greenland, Labrador and Newfoundland, as well as Canada's Arctic frontier, now guarded only by Royal Canadian Mounted Police outpoints. Canadian troops already are on guard against any Nazi attempts to gain transatlantic stepping stones on Iceland, Bermuda and the British West Indies.

Of primary importance, too, in meshing American-Canadian defenses for greatest effort would be increased power from the St. Lawrence River and enlargement of its canal facilities for ocean-going vessels.

Coordination of military supplies presents a problem of considerable difficulty, more recently intensified by the present inability of Great Britain to continue supplying Canada with various war material, especially aircraft parts and engines needed for her own immediate use in fighting off German air attacks and raiding enemy objectives. Canada's necessity of obtaining large quantities of equipment from the United States and the fact that Britain is increasing her orders there are other factors believed easing the way toward a mutual defense agreement.

In 1938, Prof. A. M. Lower, of Winnipeg, wrote in the "Canadian Defense Quarterly." At present nearly all our fighting equipment comes from Britain or is constructed on British models. As the possibility of a general war is great, it seems utterly foolish for us to go on depending on such a distance source of supply. It is only traditionalism that makes us continue to do so. Fancy having to get essential spare parts, to say nothing of guns, etc., all the way from Great Britain at a time when British supplies would be hard to get and the Atlantic itself probably highly dangerous. This policy is predicated upon complete control of the seas by Great Britain. That is a most unsafe assumption and should be abandoned. We should change over to American equipment."

Prepare for Fighting In the Far North

Military experts see also the necessity of working out new methods of training and tactics adapted to a far nothern front. Valuable information on climate and terrain is already available from nothern airmen, miners, trappers and lumbermen who have become accustomed to operating mechanical equipment under most adverse conditions. Canada, after Russia, is now the greatest air-freighting nation in the world.

Economically, adjustment of tariff schedules on both sides of the border or a form of defense reciprocity is seen as a possibly salient factor in joint measures against aggression, Canada supplying vast quantities of raw materials for fashioning into the tools of war in American factories.

There is every evidence of a steadily-growing realization—even in nationalistic Quebec and in parts of Ontario where there is objection to cooperation between Canada and any nation except Britain—that isolationism has been taught its tragic lesson in the fall of one small European nation after another, and that the democracies must stand together or fall separately.

Carol of Rumania—The 'Little Fellow' in a Big Political Poker Game

Associated Press WIREPHOTO

KING CAROL OF RUMANIA

By Daniel De Luce

Bucharest (Correspondence of the Associated Press).—Up against the toughest political poker game of his career, King Carol II plays his cards close to his gold-braided, silver-medaled chest.

The stakes are high: Rumania's independence and territory, the King's own job.

The other players are masters—Stalin of Moscow, Hitler of Berlin and Mussolini of Rome.

Yet Carol, the "little fellow" in the game, is at his nervy best when the risks are greatest.

And the final hand has yet to be dealt.

After ten years of a winning streak, which began when he flew back from exile to gain the throne in 1930, the luck of the draw went against Carol Hohenzollern-Sigmaringen late in June.

Behind the white stone facade of his palace on Calea Victoriei, the King, who was once a princely playboy, received the drastic terms of a Soviet Russian ultimatum.

Moscow's demand was for Bessarabia and northern Bucovina—about 20 per cent of Rumania's land and people. Soviet tanks, planes and troops massed for a giant push. Resistance meant fighting alone, leaving other frontiers undefended.

To give in might mean keeping the rest of Rumania intact for a better day. So by July 3 a great belt of territory from the mouth of the Danube to the northeast flanks of the Carpathian Mountains was swallowed by the U. S. S. R.

Such a national disaster might have wrecked another dynasty. The King fired the cabinet and chose a different set of ministers with pro-Nazi opinions. He kept the army mobilized and locked up the most dangerous radicals of both the right and left. Furious anti-Jewish feeling threatened to explode in the "old kingdom's" cities. The fanatical Iron Guard, although split into factions, clamored for complete governmental control.

While Rumania seethed internally, bruised and angry over the Russian squeeze play, Hungary's campaign for the return of Transylvania reached white heat and Bulgaria's chronic agitation for southern Dobruja grew more bitter. Then Germany stepped into the middle of the discord, calling to conference Hungary's premier and foreign minister, and, later, Rumania's and Bulgaria's, too.

At a time when he needed it most King Carol obviously looked to Adolf Hitler to grant him a breathing spell—if nothing more. Hitler told the Balkans to settle their troubles soon or he would step in to do the job.

Rumanians Still Believe in Him

Government underlings speak in appreciative whispers of the "big boy" but rarely mention Carol by name. Enemies accuse him of many mistakes in the past, but the more honest concede that Carol turned a good share of these "mistakes" to his ultimate advantage.

Could another man have saved Bessarabia? Most Rumanians doubt it.

The die was cast last August, when Germany and Russia made a working agreement that caught not only Rumania but England, France and Poland off guard.

After Poland's downfall, the Rumania army command redrew its defense plans, convinced that Bessarabia was strategically at Russia's mercy and that fortifying the Dniester would be of little avail. Allied arguments forced a change. Finland was putting up a game fight in the north. Gen. Maxime Weygand was building a potentially strong Allied army in the Near East that might stay Russia's hand.

So, concrete was poured for Dniester River bunkers in the dead of winter, while Soviet guards watched suspiciously from the opposite bank. The Carol Line! Even the poorest peasant was invited to subscribe to a $10,000,000 fund to finance it. And last spring, Carol went to Chisinau (now Kishinev) and declared the Bessarabian frontier would be defended with a "wall of living flesh."

Neither the King nor his hearers knew then that Anglo-French guarantees of Rumanian integrity would soon ring hollow, that the Weygand army would be immobilized, that France itself would capitulate. Nor did they know then that on Friday, June 28, Soviet tanks would scramble unhindered over the ramparts of the costly Carol Line.

The energetic, 48-year-old king, burning the lights past midnight in his palace study, never showed faint heart. The Iron Guards wanted to become the government. Very well, Carol gave them just four out of 18 important posts. Germany was the No. 1 power in Europe. The King pulled Rumania out of the League of Nations, renounced pledges of the ex-Allies, veered his foreign policy to outright pro-Axis.

Juliu Maniu, old time peasant party leader, was making trouble. The King summoned him to an audience, lectured him sharply on the misfortunes that inner political squabbling had brought Rumania, told him a new disciplined state was being created wherein youth could realize its highest ambitions. Youth and discipline would be paramount.

"Your majesty," said democratic Maniu, dissenting, "Youth is with us."

That was Maniu's opinion. The King, however, could point to more than 2,000,000 uniformed boys and girls enrolled in his National Service Legion, Straja Tarii.

Has Confidence In Self and Country

In Carol's confidence in himself and his country, there has been something contagious that helped to steady the volatile Rumanian temperament when the strain was most severe. He saw to it that construction of the sumptuous left wing of this palace, the showplace of Bucharest, went on—in the midst of general mobilization and air raid drills. Whatever the cost, some observers say, the palace has definitely bolstered public morale.

During the Russian crisis, a rumor went round that Magda Lupescu, scintillating friend of the King, had left the country. Very soon, a different report circulated. She wasn't away. She'd just had tea that same day with a prominent acquaintance or two. Those Rumanians who had most to lose by an abdication immediately breathed easier.

Not generally known is the fact that Carol's private fortune suffered when the Russians seized Bucovina. He owned shares in a big sugar company which had plants and 1,500 freight cars of its refined product in that area. Still, the King is a rich man personally with industrial interests that extend to other parts of the globe.

Does he really relish his cares and worries, this sophisticated man-of-the-world who came back to rule the most tempestuous and endangered of Balkan lands? His is tense and exhausting work. But every reign of government leads to his hand. And, associates say, he likes it.

There is virtually no buffer between the King and responsibility for the acts of his ministers. A Fascist-type constitution approved in a plebiscite in 1938 gave Carol dictatorial power.

The year 1940 has been one of reckoning for states made great by peace dictates after the World War, and among the most vulnerable is Rumania. There's little oportunity now to shove departmental reports aside for a bit of his amusing hobby of designing army uniforms, or to go hunting on his mountain estates, or to relax at the seashore.

There's no let-up for Carol. The stakes are too high.

Italian Forces Hold Advantages Over Once-Strong British Colony

By Fay Gillis Wells

That strategically important but isolated and comparatively defenseless bit of the British Empire known as British Somaliland is being squeezed figuratively into the Gulf of Aden by the Italian mailed hand.

As the pincers begin to close around the East African British Protectorate, England again has reason to rue the day she and France abandoned the black Coptic kingdom of Ethiopia to the Italians.

England's sudden recognition last month of Haile Selassie as the legitimate ruler of his subjugated land indicated a belated and desperate hope on Britain's part that something might be done to stop the flood of Italy's invasion over East Africa, but current Fascist successes would seem to indicate that British action was delayed too long.

According to dispatches, the British Somaliland Camel Corps, numbering 1,000 or so men, but the backbone of the little protectorate's defense, is overwhelmingly outnumbered and outarmed by the advancing Italian forces, fresh from four years of training in fighting native guerrilla tactics with modern mobile equipment in Ethiopia.

The London press already is attempting to justify the current British retreat in Somaliland by saying that the protectorate is not essential to the defense of Aden. Britain's guard to the Red Sea at the Straits of Bab el Mandeb, 110 miles across the Gulf of Aden from Berbera. However, the British attitude in the past indicates a contrary viewpoint.

British Somaliland, with its 344,000 inhabitants and 68,000 square miles of unproductive desert and arid plateau covered with snake-infested ant hills and camels-thorn, always have been a financial headache to the British treasury, but it was condoned and supported because of its "strategic importance" along the empire's lifeline to the Far East, via the Suez Canal.

It was acquired originally by treaties with the Sultan of Tajura and the Governor of Zeila in 1840, "for the use of the East India Co. to harbor its ships." In 1884, when the Khedive of Egypt withdrew his garrisons from Zeila, Bulhar and Berbera, the English immediately took these important posts under their protection, but until 1910, British policy in Somaliland was applied only to the coastal region. It was not until 1921 that Britain established outposts along the interior borders of the protectorate, to keep the Somali tribes in order.

British Somaliland never has been garrisoned to repulse a "white invasion." Even after Ethiopia was bombed and gassed into submission by Italy, England saw no cause for alarm. The new Fascist colony, comprising Ethiopia, Eritrea and Italian Somaliland, was bordered by the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan on the west and north and by British Kenya on the south.

But since the conquest of Ethiopia, the whole map of Europe has changed, and so has the situation in Africa. England is busily at war in Europe: Kenya and the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan are being harassed by the Italians; French Somaliland, now under Italo-German domination, has been pressured into permitting Italy to use her territory as a claw of the pincers. So in five swift years, seemingly secure British Somaliland is efficiently being squeezed into submission because her whole plan of defense pivoted around an improbable attack from the sea.

But the assault has come via the back and side doors, through the land of her deserted ally, Ethiopia, and her defeated ally, French Somaliland. Now the Italians have taken the important military positions of Zeila, Hargeisa and Oadweina, and the British are deprecating the protectorate's importance. The implication of this attitude would seem to be that the English are planning to withdraw from British Somaliland, at least temporarily, and concentrate on the defense of Aden.

Zeila, a collection of mud huts, housing some 7,000 natives and a British district officer, is the second most important port in British Somaliland, although its harbor is so shallow that all but the smallest boats must anchor a mile off shore. It is only 40 miles from Djibuti, the main port in French Somaliland, and its easiest approach is from the sea. It was the terminus of one of the main supply routes to and from Ethiopia.

The Italians probably will concentrate on the thrust from Zeila and on the easier road from Hargeisa to Berbera, leaving the British bottled up along the Burao-Sheikh-Berbera road until they capture the capital, when they will be able to cut off supplies and starve the British into submission. If the British decide to fall back along all lines to Berbera, they will leave themselves wide open to attacks from the Italians.

Berbera lies completely exposed along a sandy beach. The native village of 30,000 blacks is around the bay from the British part of town, which is inhabited by fewer than 100 whites. The English section is built around a common, along which are the radio station, the rest house for travelers, the district officers' quarters, police headquarters, the camel corps officers and the married men's quarters.

As to the nature of the terrain and the intense heat, Ethiopia, Eritrea, Italian Somaliland and British Somaliland are all similar in sections. And the Italians have been in that part of the world as long as the British. In fact, in 1903, 1904 and 1905 the British and the Italians fought together to subdue the elusive "Mad Mullah," Mohammed bin Abdullah, so British Somaliland is not altogether new to the Italian war office.

However, Britain's ace in the hole is water, which is scarce throughout Somaliland. They would destroy many of the waterholes only if they intended abandoning the country entirely, for they would be unable to return to the arid land if water were unavailable. It is as important to them as it is to the Italians and, of course, the natives who cannot escape must also be considered.

The War in Africa

Africa, principal theater of Italian war operations, holds four objectives for the forces of Il Duce. Closest to home bases, and probably the first aim of Fascist military leaders is the Nile River basin. Should Italy succed in a Delta conquest, she would hold a fountainhead of supply, and would be strategically poised at the Suez Canal route to her East African empire. Last week, however, the possibility of a blitzkreig on Alexandria seemed remote, and Italy's forces were apparently stalemated in the desert.

Greatest Italian success thus far has been in British Somaliland, objective number two on the calendar of the Palazzo Venezia staff. Last week Italian columns made deep inroads in the British colony, and forced dogged Tommies back into Berbera. Should Italy occupy Somaliland, British control of the Red Sea mouth, from Aden, would be menaced, and the Italian position in East Africa strengthened.

Toward the Kenya waterholes, third of Italian military aims, two columns have advanced into the arid region as far as Moyale. Last week, there were no signs of additional Italian success on this front, and here again Mussolini's legions had apparently come to a standstill. Should the objective be gained here, the South African troops would have no bases from which to counterattack, and Italy's position would be further solidified.

Fourth Italian spearhead is toward Khartoum, scene of "Chinese" Gordon's famous battle. In this area there has been little action, beyond a few border skirmishes and minor bombings. Success of Italian operations here would mean the severing of British communications and supply routes along the Nile, and would effectively localize the battle areas for a quick kill by the Italo-Ethiopian soldiers.

New Nazi Plots Stir Argentina

Cabinet Shake-Up Near in Wake of Land Fraud; 5th Column Is Again at Work

By Herbert M. Clark

Special Correspondent

Buenos Aires.—There are worried frowns in cafes and furious activity in official circles in Argentina today, for this country has reached a point where the general situation inspires little complacency, and where leaders are putting forth every effort to render first aid wherever it will do the most good.

Unfortunately it is hard to be certain of that point. The last few days have heaped a number of new woes on those growing out of the war's blows at national economy. Deputies, former members of the chamber and government employes have been accused of doing some heavy grafting in a land-purchase scandal in which at least three ministries are involved.

No one knows for sure when, if ever, President Robert M. Ortiz will return to his office; uncertainty as to leadership is a source of worry.

To cap the whole, the Nazi-led Fifth Column, quiet for a time, has stirred into open activity again.

The shaky internal situation, coupled with that possible armed threat to security, has increased discussions of the possibility of changes in the cabinet. Shiftse there have been talked about for some weeks now, and today, with three ministries accused directly or indirectly in the official report of the senate's committee which investigated the purchase of a block of land for the El Palomar army air base just outside Buenos Aires, talk is common everywhere.

Chief candidates in a cross-section of the discussions to possible recruits for the cabinet are Gen. Augustin P. Justo, national president from 1932 to 1938 and one of the nation's strongest men today; Dr. Federico Pinedo and Dr. Alberto Hueyo, former ministers of finance, and Dr. Leopoldo Melo, Argentina's chief delegate to the Havana conference and other Pan-American sessions and former minister of the interior.

While most informed sources agree that a change is on the cards, there is wide divergence of opinion as to the choices, mainly because no one is sure of the chooser. President Ortiz is still ailing, and rumors say that his return will not be immediate and even that Vice President Ramon S. Castillo may be required to fill the term, which runs until 1944, in spite of official bulletins saying that the president's health is improving.

Another unfortunate aspect of the situation is the sudden recrudescene of the Fifth Column as a threat, indicated by discovery of several large arms caches in the northern state of Misiones, which projects Argentine sovereignty in a narrow stretch between Paraguay on the west and southern Brazil's German colonies on the east. Machine guns, several thousand rifles, several hundred thousand rounds of ammunition, and swastikas, pictures of Hitler and manifestos calling on "Germans and Argentines" to be alert, "for the hour is near," have been seized.

Coincident with the discoveries has come a new rush of German propaganda, primarily the usual knocks at Great Britain and the United States and boosts for totalitarianism, but featuring a "horror story" of Poland, photos and texts purporting to show what the Poles, with British aid, did to Germans in Poland before war started a year ago.

guerre twice, but he deprecates that.

"They gave them out like watches," he says; "figured they would give 20 here, 20 there. Just happened to hit me twice, that's all."

Sure, it "just happened." Except that the first Croix he received was for driving an ambulance to a battery under fire during a fierce battle. And the second was for driving between the lines to rescue a mayor from a town under a terrific artillery bombardment.

"That last one was a little tough," is all he'll say about that.

THE SECOND of the Davenport breaks with tradition was this jaunt to Paris between preparatory school and college, for when Russell entered Yale, he was "different," older, more serious, contemplative.

After college came a long period adrift; a few months as researcher for the newborn Time magazine "doing the job they give only to girls now;" a few years as reporter for the Spokane Review at Spokane, Washington; a short time in Paris, writing a novel about "the sort of things first novels always cover," then back to Philadelphia, writing, making money in the stock market, trying to fuse poetry and physics into a satisfactory pattern. And just before he went to Fortune, he married Marcia Gluck, daughter of the famous opera singer, Alma Gluck.

DAVENPORT doesn't care about living comfortably or about writing, editing or playing any more. He has found himself at last, has a conviction that this country needs men who will dedicate their lives to it, work for democracy, liberty, freedom, "those big ideas that make everything else seem unimportant."

"Dedicated" is the word for Davenport today. He has no set plan for the future. The introduction and the first chapter of what was to be a "revolutionary book on liberty" have been written but he has put that aside and says only, "If Willkie finds work for me to do, I'll do it."

The Abuse of Pardoning Power

An interesting study has just been made by Dr. Nicholas Henry Julius of Hamburg, Germany, on the abuse of the pardoning power by Governors of the several states in the Union. In his new work on "The Moral Condition in the United States" Dr. Julius states "that the number of pardons granted in the United States exceeds anything ever dreamed of in Europe."

To give some idea of the frequency of the exercise of the pardoning power the writer points out the pardons in New York state in a period of 14 years amounted to three-fourths of the number of convicts in the state penitentiary. In a later period of three years more than four-fifths were pardoned. Out of 817 convicts liberated in a given year only 77 served out their term. Similar ratios occurred in Pennsylvania and Ohio. In the latter state during a period of 15 years five-sevenths of the state's convicts were pardoned.

Hamilton's Daughter Burned to Death

PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Mrs. Harriet King, wife of Judge King of this city, daughter of the first Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, Alexander Hamilton, was fatally burned on the 31st ultimo when a newspaper she was reading caught fire from a lamp. The fire spread to her clothing and before it could be extinguished she was burned to death. She was the last member of the late Secretary's immediate family. Thus it happens that both father and daughter met tragic deaths.

Mexican Gold Arrives in St. Louis

ST. LOUIS, MO.—After a long dangerous journey from Chihauhau, Mexico, via Santa Fe, a wagon loaded with $50,000 worth of gold bullion and $30,000 in specie, and accompanied by 40 other wagons containing armed guards arrived here safely. The trip required 95 days. The gold brought by this wagon train and the wagon train which arrived in May makes a total of $200,000 worth of gold brought to the city from Mexico in the last four months.

The Nelson Monument

LONDON, EUG.—It has been officially announced here that the Nelson monument to be erected in Trafalgar Square will be made of brass cannon recovered from the wreck of the H. M. S. "Royal George" sunk in the English Channel some fifty years ago. These guns were recently raised by a newly-invented diving apparatus.

Insurrection in Syria

CONSTANTINOPLE, TURKEY—Reports from Syria recently received here state that there is a formidable insurrection there in progress against the ruler, Mehemet Ali. Some six thousand rebels attacked the city of Sidon and finally captured it along with some six hundred muskets of the government's forces. The insurgent movement is declared to be a determined action by an oppressed people against a tyrannical ruler. It is believed here that the English are supporting the insurgents.

Third Term

rect," said Black about the first contention, "we must take it hereafter as settled law that whosoever declines being a candidate for the Presidency commits a crime against the freedom of elections."

As for the argument that Jefferson could not have had a third term, Black said it was "an outrage upon the truth." The fiery Pennsylvania Democrat boiled over at this point, but eventually passed on to the next President.

"But Madison," he said, "also adopted the principle of his two predecessors, and retired at the end of his second term.

And what about Monroe? asked Black. Here, he said, was a man "so clear in his great office that rivalry itself shrunk from his presence." Was it nothing, he asked, that Monroe also abided by the two-term precedent? He continued:

"The two-term principle ought to be adhered to by us and by those who come after us (if there were no other reason), simply because it was a practice of those who went before us.

"It is to the traditions of the fathers that we owe our civilization. All that we have which is holy in religion, pure in morals, or perfect in politics, is so derived and so transmitted. Without that we could not be a nation in any proper sense of the term, but a mere collection of barbarians, tame or savage, according to circumstances . . ."

Judge Black predicted that a third term of Gen. Grant would not mean a third term only, "but any number of terms he chooses to demand."

"Therefore," he said, "I conclude with Jefferson that if any man (Gen. Grant particularly) 'consent to be a candidate for a third election, I trust he will be rejected on this demonstration of ambitious views'."

Judge Black's wish was granted. In the Republican National Convention of 1880, Gen. Grant led for 35 ballots. Then the delegates left the "man on the mountain top" and, going into the "subterranean depths," quarried out a dark horse named James A. Garfield.

Judge Black and Judge Howe both died in 1885, both believing, perhaps, that the third-term controversy had been buried three years before mem.

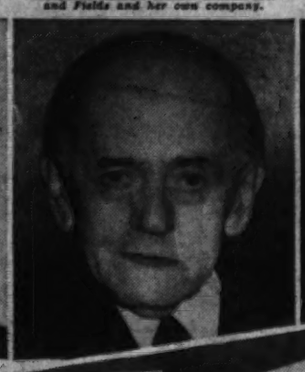
Passing of The Belasco Recalls Brilliant Plays, Players and First Nights

ETHEL BARRYMORE
Not only did the queen of the Barrymores play many of her early successes at the Belasco, she visited as recently as eight years ago to play Lady Teazle in "The School for Scandal."

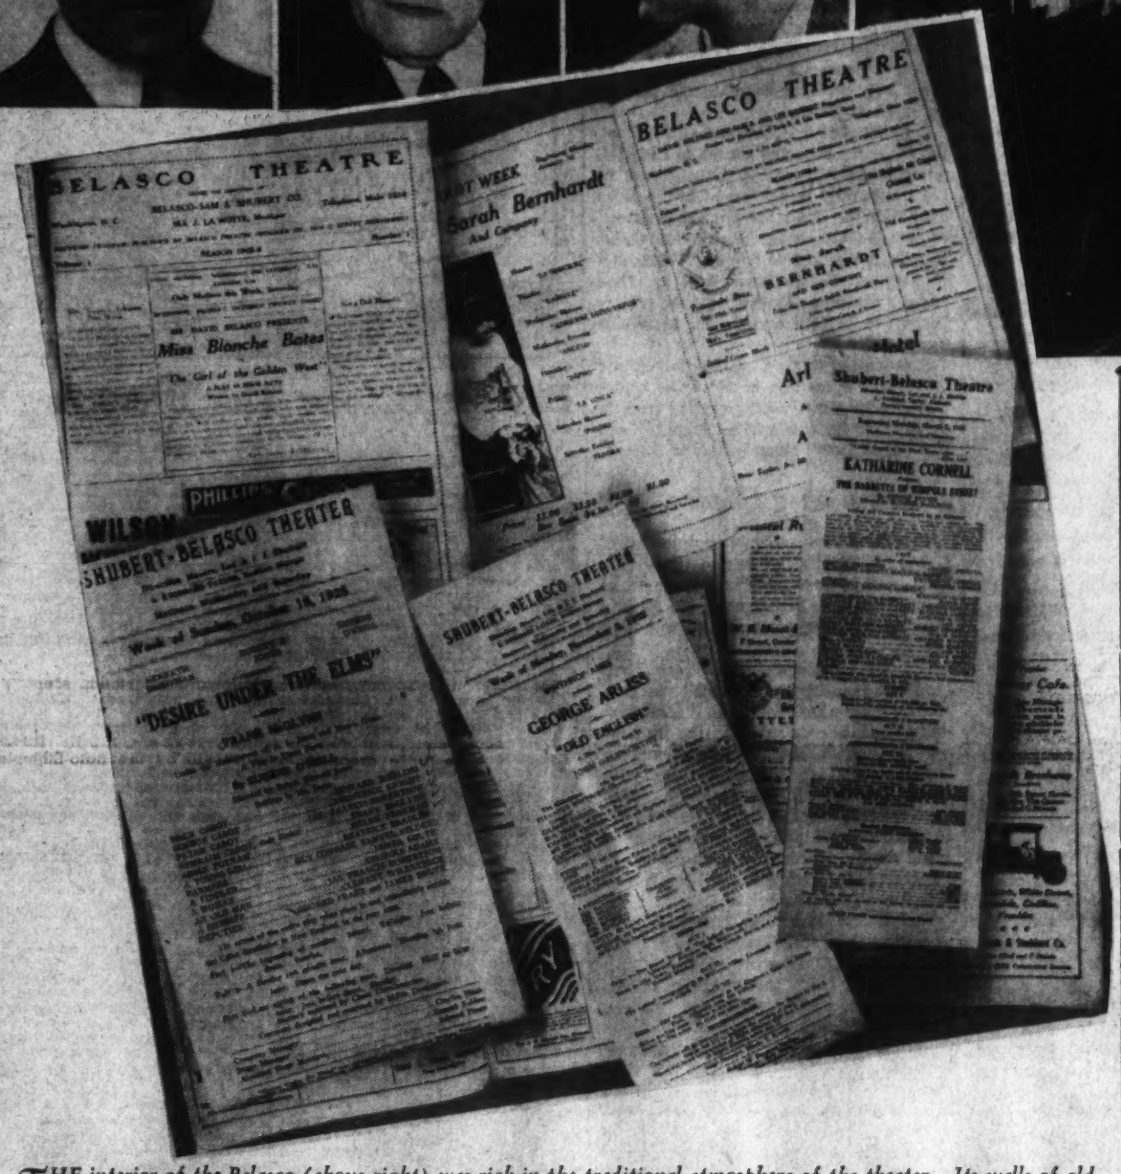
BLANCHE BATES
Who gave her first performance as "The Girl of the Golden West" the night the former Lafayette Square Opera House became the Belasco, with L. Stoddard Taylor as manager.

LILLIAN RUSSELL
The fabulous charmer of her generation who was to become the wife of our Ambassador to Spain. She trod the Lafayette Square boards with Weber and Fields and her own company.

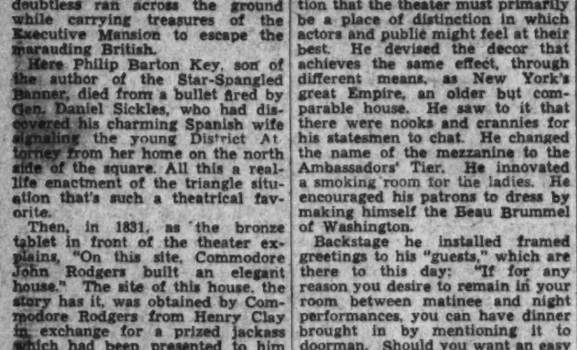
JULIA MARLOWE
For her, Manager Taylor ordered a railing built for the staircase leading from her dressing room to the stage, after she fell one night before going onstage with E. H. Sothern.



A few of the leading male stars who packed the Belasco in their heydays: left to right, William Faversham, Henry Miller, David Warfield and John Barrymore. Other men who shared the backstage dressing rooms, either as chorus members or as stars include Otis Skinner, Coquelin, E. M. and Joseph Holland, Sir Johnson Forbes-Robertson, DeWolf Hopper, Sam Bernard and Al Jolson.



THE interior of the Belasco (above right) was rich in the traditional atmosphere of the theater. Its walls of old gold were relieved by tapestries and quotations from the classics. Its Presidential box was frequently used by the White House at a time when the first family attended the theater in Washington more regularly than has been the custom during the past 20 years. Those orchestra chairs were at one time the last word in comfort. Above, a few of the programs in Manager L. Stoddard Taylor's collection. They include the David Belasco production of the premiere of "The Girl of the Golden West;" a 1925 bill of Eugene O'Neill's "Desire Under the Elms," and a program for a performance by Mme. Sarah Bernhardt.



L. Stoddard Taylor, with whom the Belasco is so closely allied in the memories of many Washington theatergoers, took over management of the house in 1905 and has been there ever since.

Purchase of Theater Ends Historic Era

Bernhardt, Belasco President Wilson Shared Drama in Famous Playhouse

By Richard L. Coe

Uncle Sam can do anything in the world he makes up his mind to do. But one thing Uncle Sam won't even try to do is to make a mere store room or pedestrian office-space out of the Belasco Theater. From cellars—which once were the swank Lafayette Turkish Baths, to the roof—under which nestled for so many years the distinctive offices of Manager L. Stoddard Taylor—the 43-year-old theater will be drenched with atmosphere until the final brick is carted away.

When it was announced last week the United States Government had finally completed the long-rumored purchase of the Lafayette Square property and the adjoining Cosmos Club, Washingtonians thought back to a past which it would require volumes to recapture. But what they thought of most when they talked about the Belasco was the "feel" of the place, the personality of the only playhouse in the world facing the home of a Nation's chief, a theater whose visitors in the front of the house were as internationally celebrated as those behind the footlights.

Through most of those years, Washingtonians knew, one man had carried on a tradition that will seep through the place even when Government records and filing cases "pack the house" which, Treasury Department officials feel, will give way in a short time to a new building. Ever since that night of October 23, 1905, when Blanche Bates as "The Girl of the Golden West" reopened the theater, newly-titled the Belasco, L. Stoddard Taylor has greeted Presidents and stars. Through the changing years, through the ever-new faces, Stoddard Taylor has been so identified with the playhouse that its story is his story; that any truly intimate view of the theater must be seen through his eyes.

Actually, of course, the drama of that plot along the east side of Lafayette Square goes back to long before the theater was dreamed of. When this site for a capital was scarcely more than a hazy ideal in the mind of Mount Vernon's master, our town was a wilderness. And while President Washington never actually lived in the White House, he was familiar with the site. He visited the vicinity with fellow lodge members in 1793, before laying in the cornerstone of the Capitol. While hanging her washing in the East Room, Abigail Adams could look out her windows at a cow pasture. In 1814 Dolly Madison doubtless ran across the ground while carrying treasures of the Executive Mansion to escape the marauding British.

Here Philip Barton Key, son of the author of the Star-Spangled Banner, died from a bullet fired by Gen. Daniel Sickles, who had discovered his charming Spanish wife signaling the young District Attorney from her home on the north side of the square. All this a real-life enactment of the triangle situation that's such a theatrical favorite.

Then, in 1831, as the bronze tablet in front of the theater explains, "On this site, Commodore John Rodgers built an elegant house." The site of this house, the story has it, was obtained by Commodore Rodgers from Henry Clay in exchange for a prized jackass which had been presented to him by a member of the Spanish nobility on one of his voyages abroad. Not long after, it became a boarding house in which John C. Calhoun lived, while Secretary of War, and Chief Justice Taney, before he was appointed to the bench. Henry Clay went back as a boarder, remembering no doubt his asinine trade.

But let the plaque itself continue: "In it on April 14, 1865, an attempt was made to assassinate W. H. Seward, Secretary of State, by one of the conspirators who murdered Abraham Lincoln the same night. The Hon. James G. Blaine afterward bought the house and died here."

Then, in 1895, Uriah H. Painter, a wealthy engineer, erected the present building, the first fireproof theater. It was called the Lafayette Square Opera House. Several of the window frames and doorways of the old Blaine home, in which, by the way, Walter Damrosch married the daughter of the one-time Presidential nominee, were retained for the new edifice.

Greatest Glory Began in 1905

But it's in 1905 when the Messrs. Shubert and David Belasco took over the house that its greatest glory begins. Mr. Taylor became house manager for the company and instituted immediately his conception that the theater must primarily be a place of distinction in which actors and public might feel at their best. He devised the decor that achieves the same effect, through different means, as New York's great Empire, an older but comparable house. He saw to it that there were nooks and crannies for his statesmen to chat. He changed the name of the mezzanine to the Ambassadors' Tier. He innovated a smoking room for the ladies. He encouraged his patrons to dress by making himself the Beau Brummel of Washington.

Backstage he installed framed greetings to his "guests," which are there to this day: "If for any reason you desire to remain in your room between matinee and night performances, you can have dinner brought in by mentioning it to doorman. Should you want an easy chair for rest and if there is anything wrong in anyway please advise the management. You are my guest and I want you to be as comfortable as possible. L. S. T."

John Barrymore, he recalled last week, napped in his skytop offices of a matinee day. And Mrs. Richard Mansfield showed him only a year ago the card he had made for her dressing-room door during one of that leading acting couple's visits. He has book after book of letters and telegrams from his "guests," thanking him for their pleasant stay and sending their love to Mrs. Taylor and daughter Imogene.

There's some foolery in one of his books by the two Davids—Warfield and Belasco—after the run of "The Music Master," who couldn't "understand how we played to so much business."

Then there was the time Charley Taylor—no relation—was Drama Editor of The Post. Henry Miller opened before New York in a play which he thought very good. So did all the other reviewers except Charley. And when "The Great Divide" was called "The Great American play" by the New York critics, Henry Miller packed up the scenery, streaked back to Washington for one performance just to show "that guy on The Post" that he'd been wrong.

Reminisciences of Fields and Faversham

Then there was that afternoon when Lew Fields dropped by the house for a chat with Taylor. It happened to be an afternoon when the Hawke Sisters were presenting their Children's Dancing School in one of those little revues that still are a tradition with such organizations. Lew sat down in a back row seat with Taylor and watched the kids. Picking out a little 7-year-old in a line of dancers he asked: "Who is that little girl?"

"Oh, she's a local child, a friend of my daughter, Imogene," replied the manager, "her name's Brown, Helen Brown." "She's got a lot of promise," enthused Fields. "Take me back afterwards, will you? I'd like to meet her."

And meet her Lew Fields did, and her mother too. "Look me up some day," said Lew. Which is exactly what Helen Hayes Brown did. She played in Lew Fields' company for several seasons.

"And you can't leave out Favvy," recalled Mr. Taylor. By "Favvy," he meant handsome William Faversham and his well-loved wife, Julie Opp. "Favvy" brought a new play to the Belasco once, Echegaray's "The World and His Wife." It hadn't been in New York yet and he'd arranged a setting with walls of silk panels. It must have been a beautiful setting, too, for that was a novel idea then. But the fire marshal stepped in (still under the influence of the Iroquois fire in Chicago, no doubt) and demanded that the silk be treated with an acid fire-proofing. "Favvy" had to give in, but he winced all week as he looked at the streaks that marred his unusual panels.

Sarah Bernhardt was a great one to fear the cold. She lived in a phobia of drafts and before she was due to arrive, the dapper manager would comb backstage for cracks and crannies which might threaten Madame's peace of mind. She always rated a stage dressing room, too, rushing into its decorated "flats" after each exit if only to escape the drafts.

Season after season, E. H. Sothern and his wife Julia Marlowe played their Shakespearean repertoire, numbering among others in their company who were to be celebrated "on their own" the late Walter Connolly. It was during one of their appearances that Mr. Taylor had a railing built backstage which is there yet.

Entering the stage door, one finds the call board on one's right and a large full-length mirror to the left. Just beyond, on the right, is a stairway leading up to the dressing rooms of the principals. Since all this was just off the entrance for stage right, it was a habit of the players to glance at themselves in the mirror before making their entrance. Coming down from the star's dressing room on the first landing one night, Miss Marlowe tripped and fell, very possibly in her haste to glance at the mirror before making her entrance. Always the courtier, Stoddard Taylor had a railing built for her before the next performance.

Many Leading Figures of Stage Played There

How many great figures of the stage that stairway has taken to that mirror in 45 years no one can know. Yvette Guilbert played there when Cornelia Otis Skinner was just a twinkle in her father's eye and Ruth Draper hadn't been seriously considered, either. She's the Franch singing diseuse who until last year was still one of the joys of the Paris halls. Maude Adams, so Mr. Taylor insists, faced that mirror before going on as "Peter Pan," and remarkable Mrs. Fiske tilted her cap at herself before shedding the years for her "Becky Sharp" and, later, Ibsen's "Rosmersholm," with George Arliss, Bruce McRae and Fuller Mellish.

The Bostonians rolled through "Robin Hood" there, an appropriate home stage, for composer Reginald de Koven was the first conductor of an earlier National Symphony Orchestra. Jessie Bartlett Davis sang "Oh, Promise Me" while MacDonald, Barnaby and Karl sang the other roles to the delight of many a Washingtonian who paid nightly to sit in on this greatest of American operettas—before the advent of "Show Boat."

Nelson Bell Recalls Some Famous Performances

So, in tracking down stories of the old Belasco, the obvious thing to do would be to interrupt the man at the typewriter at the desk in front of this one. You know him well as Nelson B. Bell, who's covered the local drama scene for as long as the Belasco's been open. We've interrupted him for a bit of reminiscence and discover his are as voluminous and chaotic as Stoddard Taylor's.

Elsie Janis, as "Baby Elsie," although slightly beyond that juvenile billing, appeared there, recalls Drama Editor Bell, in revamped versions of musical hits that already had served older and more firmly established stars. Mr. Bell recalls her in an abandoned Marie Cahill success in which, in opposition to Albert Chevalier, headlining a few blocks away at the old P. B. Chase Theater, later Poli's, she astonished local connoisseurs by offering a series of impersonations that quite matched the more mature "impressions" of her older rival.

Chevalier also played the Belasco, though. Dressed in his famed London Coster's suit, he received Manager Taylor one afternoon and presented him with one of those innumerable pearl buttons. Taylor had it set in silver and has it yet.

It was in the Belasco, too, Mr. Bell points out, that Frances Starr made her stellar debut under David Belasco in "The Rose of the Rancho." Chosen, like David Warfield, for the plaintive quality of her voice by the "old master," Miss Starr made her bow in distinguished company. Charles Richman, Hamilton Revelle were her leads and Oscar Eagle, as stage manager, manipulated more full and "baby" spots than any stage ever before had borne to lend the brilliance of semi-tropical sunlight to a vivid story of California. Now Mrs. R. Golden Donaldson, of Washington, Miss Starr returned to the stage briefly several years ago with Blanche Bates in support of Katharine Hepburn in "The Lake."

It was at the Belasco, too, during the first Wilson Administraiton, that Weber and Fields presented a single matinee performance of their "Jubilee" production, after a reconciliation that followed years of separate endeavor. Surrounding the stars of the old New York Music Hall that afternoon were William Collier, Lillian Russell, Pete Dailey, Ada Lewis, Frankie Bailey and as many other members of the original company as could be coaxed from their other roles at the time or, as in the case of Fay Templeton, lured from retirement.

Many Noted Musical Comedies Opened There

This was a performance which coincided exactly with Lillian Russell's marriage to Alexander Moore, who was later to become United States Ambassador to Spain. Throughout the performance Weber and Fields referred to Moore, the fourth of Miss Russell's husbands, as "Me Too," a little episode not touched upon in the recent motion picture depicting the life of the effulgent Miss Russell and her "Era of Plush."

Speaking of musical comedies and the like, many a noted one packed the three balconies of the Belasco. One of them was "The Gay White Way," with Blanche Ring, wife of screen comic Charles Winninger, and Alexander Carr, the "Pagliacci" of his day. Lew Dockstader's Minstrels found Al Jolson as an "end man," getting some of that training which was to make of that pseudo-Washintonian "the world's greatest entertainer." Lew Leslie's fabulously successful "Rhapsody in Black," with Ethel Waters singing the hits, had a dress rehearsal that lasted until what cast, stage hands and all passers-by figured was the beginning of the end. But somehow it was pulled together in time to please the three-times-deferred first nighters.

Leafing through some of Mr. Taylor's many programs, you can be stunned at the richness of some of the casting. With Peggy Wood as Candida in 1925 was Elizabeth Patterson as Prossy, Pedro De Cordoba as Morell, Ernest Cossart as Burgess and Richard Bird as Marchbanks. Miss Cornell's company of "The Barretts of Wimpole Street" included Brian Aherne, Margalo Gillmore, Brenda Forbes, Joyce Carey and Ian Emery, not to forget "Flush," immortalized by Mabel Woollcott.

From reading all this you might suppose the Belasco had a corner on the local theatrical market. Such was not the case. It was the first wedge in this vicinity made by the Messrs. Shubert, "The Boys From Syracuse," into the rich pearl beds controlled by the powerful Klaw & Erlanger syndicate. K. & E. actors played K. & E. theaters in those days, and that was that.

So in their effort to break this trust, the Shuberts took over the struggling second-rate house on Lafayette Square. Later they acquired Poli's and the Shubert-Garrick. It was to the Garrick, by the way, that Manager Taylor brought his talents during two seasons at the close of the war, when the Belasco became a vaudeville house and a favorite of President Wilson.

Presidential theater-going, so uniquely our town's, has had its share of lore at the Belasco. Archie Butt, too soon to be lost on the Titanic, kept the White House theatrically au-courant during Teddy Roosevelt's Administration. Teddy was a great theater-goer. Here's a card he sent Taylor one evening: "I have not the night off as I had expected so I send two friends from the White House instead."

William Howard Taft was a great bouquet-tosser. Partial to comedy, he was always that affable gentleman. Once at the Belasco he threw a bouquet to Italian songbird Mme. Luisa Tetrazzini. Two Big People!

But of course President Wilson was one of the great theater-going Chief Executives. He asked Mr. Taylor not to reserve the Presidential box for him. Possibly he preferred to see the play and not be part of it. At any rate, he was given a specially converted loge at the front of the Ambassadors' Tier and attended often.

Presidents Harding and Coolidge were not avid playgoers, while President Hoover never once attended the theater during his four years in office. Since the Administration of President Franklin D. Roosevelt the Belasco has had little to offer which the Chief Executive cannot run off on his own projector in the White House.

So We Come to the Third Act Curtain

Which just about sums up the Belasco's career in recent years. The films have spread beyond the powers of imagination, while the spoken stage is now confined to the National.

So we come to a third-act curtain, after which there will be no more. In a story that could have covered a thousand pages, with pictures and programs thrown in for an extra thousand, we've left out many names that never should be forgotten. We didn't mention the two Lionels—Barrymore and Atwill—nor Constance Collier with John and Lionel in "Peter Ibbetson." And we forgot to tell the tragic story of Walter Browne and his morality play, "Everywoman." Laura Nelson Hall was the star of this one, which was produced after much struggling on the author's part. But Walter Browne died in a far-away city the night before the play was to open.

With all that's happened to the Belasco and Stoddard Taylor as its mentor, is it likely that filing cases, boxes and barrels will take away its atmosphere? Even Ford's Theater, which suffered a similar fate before it became a Government museum, had an air about it, for all its packing boxes. And when Mr. Taylor gives his irreplaceable collection of programs to Harvard's Theater Collection, somehow the Belasco will maintain its charm and memories.

with efforts to that date. Voters were then asked:

"Are you satisfied with the progress that the present Administration is making in rearming our country?"

Sixty-one per cent said they were satisfied, 23 per cent were dissatisfied, and the remaining 16 per cent said they lacked information or had no impression.

Today's survey probably raises a danger signal for Mr. Roosevelt's Administration and for the Democratic majority in Congress. Further Institute tests will measure the public's reactions as the campaign proceed

As of today, however, the striking fact is that a substantial number of Democrats as well as Republicans interviewed in the Institute survey say they are not satisfied with defense preparations. The vote by parties is:

	Satisf.	Not Satisf.	Don't Know
Democrats	35%	37%	28%
Republicans	29	42	29

Southerners tend to be less satisfied with progress to date than persons living in the Middle West:

	Satisf.	Not Satisf.	Don't Know
New Engl'd	34%	41%	25%
Mid-Atlantic	34	41	25
East Central	27	42	31
West Central	37	[illegible]	30
South	27	[illegible]	31
West	33	39	28

What lies back of these impressions, in the minds of the voters, is shown by the voters' own comments to field investigators. Those who say they are "satisfied" chiefly comment that "everything possible is being done to speed up production, and that the results will become more apparent later on." Others simply say that, all things considered, "the present rate of national defense is satisfactory."

To these voters must be added another group, however—representing about one voter in every five who says he is satisfied—because "the national defense situation is not very alarming at present," "we have ample time to prepare," or that "defense has been overstressed."

The most frequent comment of those dissatisfied, with the speed of defense measures is simply that "too little has been accomplished," or that "production kinks and bottle-necks have not been eliminated." Other comments complain of "governmental red-tape," of "lack of coordination between Government and industry," or point to the great distance United States defense preparations may have to cover in a very short time.

France Seeks Food

France's Foreign Minister, Paul Baudoin, has made a very eloquent appeal to Great Britain to relax her blockade of the continent so that foodstuffs can reach the women and children of France. M. Baudoin says that Germany has given "most solemn guarantees" that imported food will be reserved for the French people.

But the British cannot be expected to trust such promises. Besides they want assurances that Germany will not benefit indirectly from humanitarian projects. If the sending of food into France resulted in Germany taking more food out of France for her own use, the relaxation of the blockade would benefit Germany, not France.

The British are relying heavily upon the weapon of the blockade to turn the tide of battle in their favor. However much they may wish to succor a former Ally, they dare not permit humanitarian impulses to control their actions. When a nation's very existence is at stake, its defenders should not be judged harshly if they harden their hearts to the cries of the weak and hungry.

The French are relying upon the United States Government, acting through the Red Cross, to go to their aid if the British can be persuaded to give safe conduct to food ships. Hence the problem presented by the blockade is one that should be given our earnest consideration.

There is no denying that the establishment of a really adequate administrative control of food distribution in France to prevent Germany from benefiting from imports presents many difficulties. But if the areas supplied were restricted, the difficulties probably would not be insuperable. Certainly it would be an easier undertaking than the provisioning of several invaded countries as proposed by former President Hoover.

At any rate, the possibilities of feeding hungry victims of the war should be explored thoroughly in the hope that a way can be found which will meet with British approval. Food sent under careful supervision from this country would involve an entirely different problem from mere relaxation of the blockade at the request of helpless France.

The Ford Order

Henry Ford has insisted that his plants located in the United States should not manufacture war materials for foreign powers. His attitude resulted in the breaking off last June of negotiations with the Defense Commission for the manufacture of 9,000 airplane engines, 6,000 of which were intended for Great Britain.

While Mr. Ford was within his rights in attaching conditions to acceptance of a Government defense order, the incident made an unfavorable impression upon the public. To many Americans it seemed inexcusable for a leading industrialist to refuse for personal reasons to cooperate in speeding work on the air-defense program.

The Ford company is preeminently a creation of individual enterprise. It has expanded and prospered largely because its management has had a free hand in formulating and executing business plans free from Government interference. The Government is relying upon voluntary cooperation from industrial concerns of this independent type to speed the defense program to completion.

If that cooperation should be withheld or be given grudgingly, demands would inevitably arise for governmental control of all defense industries. None of the country's industrial leaders would resent such interference more heartily or denounce it more bitterly than Mr. Ford.

Hence there are more reasons than one for welcoming the news that the Ford company has accepted an order to construct 4,000 planes for the United States. It is reassuring to know that the facilities of this large organization are now available for the production of airplane engines for the Army and Navy. Even more important are the indications that the company and the Defense Commission do not intend to adopt a "stand-off" attitude toward each other that might seriously retard defense efforts.

Mr. Willkie's Challenge

Wendell L. Willkie has made a powerful bid for national leadership. His acceptance speech at Elwood, Ind., yesterday was far more than a political address. It was an eloquent call for national unity and strength in meeting the dangers that threaten America in this chaotic period.

From beginning to end the speech was infused with a keen sense of public responsibility. Mr. Willkie gave assurance that there is no hate in his heart and will be none in his campaign.

The tenor of his address suggests, too, that he intends to discuss the national issues before the country without cavil or pettiness. And that impression is strengthened by his proposal that President Roosevelt meet him on various public platforms throughout the country to debate issues concerning "the life and death of democracy."

In brief, Mr. Willkie's aim is to rescue American democracy from its present weakness. Every specific policy he outlined is subordinate to that central objective. He made no sweeping indictment of the New Deal. On the contrary, he approved many of the reforms for which President Roosevelt is chiefly responsible. But he severely condemned the Administration's obstructionist policies which, he believes, are leading the United States "to the end of the road."

Many thoughtful observers have accurately diagnosed the tragedy of France. Perhaps no one has explained it so tersely or effectively as did Mr. Willkie. France, he said, "forgot that freedom must be dynamic, that it is forever in the process of creating a new world."

America must not make a similar mistake. We must begin once more to work, to build, to produce, to sacrifice and, if necessary, to suffer hardships in the interest of preserving our way of life. That is the heart of Mr. Willkie's message. "If I am chosen the leader of this democracy," the Republican candidate declared, "I shall lead you down the road of sacrifice and of service to your country . . . You must not be deceived about the difficulties of the future. You will have to be hard of muscle, clear of head, brave of heart."

Mr. Willkie did not follow the lead of lesser politicians by making President Roosevelt's bid for a third term the major issue of the campaign. Nor did he indulge in any loose talk of New Deal attempts to set up a dictatorship in Washington. His fears for the future of liberal government in this country are based on much more solid ground. He rightly sees that democracy cannot survive in this age of totalitarianism unless it regains the strength and virility that made this country great in its pioneer days.

"It is from weakness," he declared, "that people reach for dictators and concentrated government power. Only the strong can be free. And only the productive can be strong . . .

"I say that we must substitute for the philosophy of spending the philosophy of production. You cannot buy freedom. You must make freedom."

These are sincere, courageous and truthful words. They crystallize for the American people a momentous issue that must be faced regardless of the outcome of the election next November. As a Nation we have become soft. Millions have resigned themselves to mere existence on doles and subsidies. In its emphasis upon social security, the Administration has ignored the fact that the basis of all economic progress is the expansion of employment and production. Unless the trend toward a static economy in a revolutionary world can be reversed, safeguards for the preservation of democracy will have precious little value.

Mr. Willkie's indorsement of "some form of selective service" fits neatly into his general policy. America must be strong from the military as well as the economic viewpoint. The G. O. P. nominee agrees with the Administration that conscription is "the only democratic way" in which that strength can be quickly attained.

On questions of foreign policy there are no more differences between President Roosevelt and Mr. Willkie than between the Democratic and Republican platforms. Mr. Willkie eagerly indorsed the President's promise to extend "the material resources of this Nation" to the "opponents of force," assuming that "military involvement in the present hostilities" is not implied. There is not the slightest illusion in his mind as to our vital interest in the survival of Great Britain as a world power.

But the Republican candidate takes vigorous exception to the way in which Franklin Roosevelt has reversed Theodore Roosevelt's policy of walking softly and carrying a big stick. Since the President has not recently indulged in useless "inflammatory statements," it may be that he has already taken to heart previous criticism of that practice.

The agreement between the two candidates on the fundamentals of foreign policy is a happy circumstance. Its effect, however, is to throw even greater emphasis on the momentous domestic issue that Mr. Willkie has raised. The national interest demands earnest debate of that issue in the same spirit that the address at Elwood evoked.

Discord At Shanghai

When the British withdrew their garrison from Shanghai the other day the Japanese made use of the occasion to clamor for the withdrawal of the American garrison from the International Settlement. The chorus was soon taken up by the Japanese-controlled press in Shanghai and by Japan's Chinese puppets.

The United States Government and the American military authorities on the spot stood firm. British withdrawal, said Acting Secretary of State Welles, means no change in this country's policy. Soon Admiral Hart arrived at Shanghai. Because of his rank he became senior officer of the Settlement's international forces.

For a time it appeared that this firm stand would bring a satisfactory settlement of the controversy. But Tokyo is also taking a determined attitude. In the negotiations regarding the patrolling of the erstwhile British defense sector a tentative agreement was reached at Shanghai. Part of the area in question was to be taken over by Japanese troops and the remainder, including the Settlement's waterfront, by the Americans. But spokesmen for the Japanese government say the compromise will not be accepted at Tokyo.

Opportunists first, last and all the time, the Japanese probably intend to keep the question open pending the outcome of the battle now being fought in the skies over Britain. They are not yet prepared to accept German assurances that Great Britain is doomed to defeat. When and if England falls there will be time enough to move. Meanwhile they are reluctant to forsake any of their ambitious aims in China.

A potentially ugly situation thus seems to be in the making at Shanghai. The United States may soon be called upon to decide how far it is willing to go to keep the "Open Door" slightly ajar in China.

A Promising Choice

President Roosevelt's appointment of Nelson A. Rockefeller to the newly created post of coordinator of commercial and cultural relations among the American republics appears to be a happy choice.

Mr. Rockefeller's highly specialized academic training has equipped him culturally for the task he is about to undertake. And his varied activities in connection with Rockefeller properties have brought him into direct contact with South American business groups. With such a background, a young man of Mr. Rockefeller's reputed ability should be of great service in bringing about a better understanding between the peoples of North and South America.

The United States has experts capable of dealing with specific problems of trade and defense affecting the nations of this hemisphere. But it has long felt the need of persuasive official spokesmen who can make our viewpoint known to Latin America. Honest propaganda based upon facts, in short, is essential at this time to counteract the effect of Nazi-inspired misinformation designed to create unfounded suspicions of our motives in seeking closer contacts with Latin America.

No specific information is now available concerning the precise nature of Mr. Rockefeller's duties. But it seems highly probable that chief emphasis will be placed upon the cultivation of understanding rather than the accomplishment of more specific tasks. Such understanding is certainly a necessary preliminary to effective cooperation with the countries of Latin America.

A Matter of Elegance

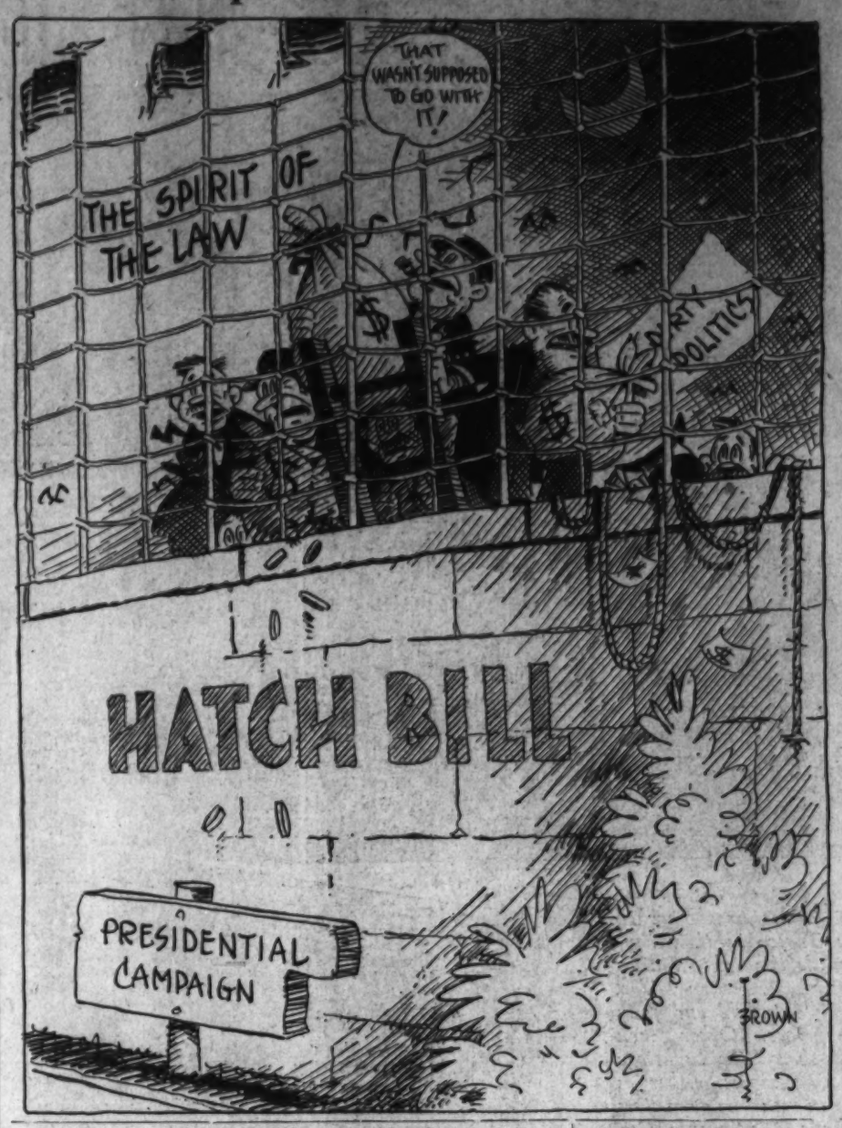
From the Hartford Daily Courant

Mark Anthony may have been the biggest spash on the Nile when he dazzled Cleopatra with his military splendor; the Persians may raise their voices in memory of the gaudy Xerxes who cut down the three hundred at Thermopylae, and Achilles in the trappings of the gods may have fixed the trembling Trojans in their tracks.

But none of these heroes can dim the glitter of Nazi No. 2, Hermann Wilhelm Goering. Spacious estates, frolicking lion cubs, extravagant uniforms are his background. Into it he shoves a personal rotundity that grandly illuminates the startling display. And to make doubly sure of fitting recognition, he sprinkles the whole effect with elaborate decorations. For instance, his latest acquisitions of that nature were a Reich marshal's baton tipped with the imperial orb and two massive, gold epaulets sufficiently scrumptious to trumpet his high rank.

And if that were not enough, Herr Goering is seizing every opportunity to match his every uniform with a suitable title. So far, he can write after his name: Reich's marshal of the Greater Reich, commander in chief of the Air Force, Reichstag President, Premier of Prussia, Reich economic leader, air minister, chairman of the inner council for defense, Feuhrer-designate and master of the hunt. As Carl Sandburg remarked of the ostentatious Gen. Winifield Scott: "A parade by his lonesome."

The Unexpected Addition To The Wall



Britain Before The Blitzkrieg

London, August 6, 1940.

Things are picking up. For weeks we have lived in the shadow of imminent invasion, with bombs and parachutists always at the back of our minds. Vacations were off, and theaters and movies languished whilst people stayed at home to listen to the news. But such tension is impossible for long, and now we are slipping back into normal routine—there were five first nights in London this week. Yet there is no return to the comfortable complacency of the winter months. We live in a Britain where the first bombs have fallen, where the first children and old people have been slaughtered, where we await all the horrors of total war. We say "Good night" with a new dire meaning. Waiting for the blitzkrieg is unpleasant—sometimes one half wishes it would come quickly. But however uncomfortable the waiting, the blitzkrieg itself will certainly be worse, so I echo Gwendolyn in "The Importance of Being Earnest:" "This suspense is intolerable—I do hope it goes on!"

The success of the London stage is an American play, Robert Ardrey's "Thunder Rock." It was produced in the tiny Neighborhood Theater, which is a club venture in Kensington, on the day after France surrendered. Hailed by every critic as the play of the hour, it held on while theater after theater shut its doors, until it was left he only straight play in London. It has triumphed because i goes sraight to the heart of the times; it's audiences rise strengthened and equipped to the ordeal that awaits them. Written around the character of a misanthropic lighthouse keeper on Lake Michigan, it mirrors as does no other play the problems of our age, it enthrals and stirs and is intellectually satisfying.

One of the gayest entertainments in London is Robert Donat's revival of Shaw's melodrama, "The Devil's Disciple." It is a sparkling production with Donat giving a lively performance as Dick Dudgeon. This play about the American Revolutionary War is curiously up-to-date, and the audience loudly applaud cracks about the British war office, whtch would risk a jail sentence if made in the nearest pub.

Donat, whose love of the British stage is proof against Hollywood offers, has been touring this and other Shaw plays around the smaller English towns for many months. Other actors are showing a similar indifference to riches. Robert Morley, who scored a New York triumph in "Oscar Wilde" and a Hollywood one in "Marie Antoinette" has been playing in a small provincial repertory company. John Gielgud and Beatrice Lillie are traveling from camp to camp entertaining the troops with a program of Noel Coward's plays. Sybil Thorndike is leading the famous Old Vic company in a tour of "Macbeth," which is sticking to one-night stands in parish halls that haven't known a stage play in 25 years.

People are reading "And No Man's Wit," Rose Macaulay's wise and mordant novel about post-civil war Spain; Janet Flanner's nostalgic "An American in Paris," Somerset Maugham's new volume of short stories "The Mixture as Before" (everybody is wondering how soon he will make use of the "copy" obtained during his dramatic escape from France), Howard Spring's chronicle novel, "Fame is the Spur," and Lin Yutang's "Moment in Peking," just published here.

Most discussed book of the moment is Cato's "Guilty Men," a searing indictment of the Munichеers. Banned by two chains of book stores, it has nevertheless run through eight editions in four weeks, although no one could enjoy reading this bitter record. In front of the contents table is a "Caste" headed by Mr. Chamberlain, of 15 "Men of Munich." The author has conscientiously gone through the speeches of these men for the last ten years and the result is to present the conservative leaders as doddering incompetents who have subsisted year after year on false promises and camouflaged failure.

Mr. Churchill has asked that in the present stress we shall avoid recriminations. Cato's piece of barefaced recrimination has printed on the cover Mr. Churchill's own words in Parliament (May 29, 1936) "The use of recriminating about the past is to enforce effective action at the present." Naturally, there is a lot of furious guesswork going on about Cato's identity. Most popular bet is Michael Foot, feature writer of the Evening Standard.

Sidelights on London. First: The city has never been so polyglot. Around Piccadilly Circus one sees dozens of jaunty French sailors, sober Dutch officers, Polish airmen, bewildered Norwegian fishermen, hearty Canadians and the Anzacs in the familiar wide-brimmed hats, that give them that god-like look. (Small country towns and villages are crowded with women and children from Holland, from Belgium, from Poland, from France). Exiles who can afford it drift to one quarter, thus Bloomsbury has become the haunt of Norwegians and every hotel lounge and back-street cafe has its incongruous quota of weather-beaten men returned from the whalers. Meantime the Italian quarter of Soho has lost many of its leading figures to the internment camp.

Second sidelight: The wit of the home-made newspaper placards. The paper shortage has put a ban on the thousands of headline bills with which London used to be plastered at each edition; now the city's elderly newsboys chalk them over on a piece of blackboard. Recent samples—(On the first encounter between the British and Italian navies) "Mediterranean Boat Race." (On the budget, which included an additional tax on beer) "Your Courage, Your Cheerfulness will cost you a penny more a pint.

Third sidelight. The rash of bicycles—a result of petrol-rationing. Everyone rides them, even duchesses in Piccadilly; their value is above Rolls Royces.

Inside the fortress daily life has changed amazingly little. The first air raid is horribly frightening; the heart-chilling wail of the siren sends one rushing to the shelter with knees knocking together at the thought that malevolent bombers are actually overhead. But nothing very much happens, and by the third or fourth time one just turns over in bed and goes to sleep again. Invasion is a horrifying thought; one visualizes German troops swinging down the road and wonders "Should I have the pluck to sling a milk-bottle?". But the days pass and ordinary routine goes on. Life inside the fortress still holds many of the ordinary pleasant things and in these days we cling to what is commonplace, dear and undramatic, in a rocking world the little precious trivialities mean more than ever, for they are the preoccupations with which we ward off despair.

We, the common people of England are now the cynosure of the world, for on us its fate largely depends. Frightened we may be, but exhilarated too, and there is no sign of wavering. We are all proud of the high morale of our sailors and airmen who are, after all, drawn from the reservoir of the ordinary population, and it would be shame indeed if we who face so much less danger were to let them down.

One thing we know. Each one of us must stand individually for the things to which we all aspire. Whatever may happen on the battlefield, none of us can ever make a personal surrender to then forces of slavery, brutality and despair. We have heard many quotations recently of "This England never did nor never shall lie at the proud foot of a conqueror," or "come the three corners of the world in arms, and we will shock them" variety, but to me the most stirring is one from the Old Testament: the words of the three men who said "Our God whom we serve is able to deliver us out of the burning fiery furnace. But if not, be it known unto thee, O King, that we will not serve thy gods." Rest assured that we will not.

PHYLLIS M. WARNER.

Dukedom Off Miami

If you plan to visit the Bahamas, be sure to look for Jerry. He will drive you, to the tune of a merriment typical of Negro geniality, to the places secret in his heart where flourish the wild orchids. Or, if you do not care for Jerry and his orchids—there are 30 species of flower in the island—you can take unto yourself the leisurely privileges of the capital, Nassau, and enjoy to the full what is known as the world's most glorious surf at Paradise Beach. You can watch, if you will, the multicolored sails of graceful craft flying against the turquoise background of the sea. Whether these or the shops around the British Colonial Hotel attract you, nothing will prevent your ready agreement that here is a capital fit for a duke, especially when that duke has been a king.

When Edward, Duke of Windsor, sets himself down in Government House to wield the pen of British colonial office, he may write a chapter into the annals of his new dukedom off Miami as yet impossible to foretell. Previous to his appointment to this post, the two most notable events in the history of the islands had taken place in 1492 and 1859, respectively. The first was the landing of Columbus at San Salvador; the second, the granting by the British crown of a subsidy to Samuel Cunard, whereby he was able to initiate a monthly mail service between New York and Nassau.

Columbus wrote to Ferdinand and Isabella that "this country"—meaning the eastern extremes of the Bahama group—"excels all others as far as the day surpasses the night in splendor." Of the aborigines, who met a sad end at the hands of Haiti's governor in 1509, Columbus said that "their conversation is the sweetest imaginable; their faces always smiling."

Windsor comes as governor general. Never before has the governmental head been so vested; this title has been reserved for use in the dominions. So the appointment of the duke raises a question with the tradition-supporting Britishers of Nassau as to just what destiny the circumstance portends. Perhaps the title has been given Edward merely because of his unique position in the empire. Again, it may suggest that British possessions to the southeast of the United States are to be gathered into one fold and given dominion status.

One guess is trustworthy. Windsor has been for many years the empire's No. 1 salesman to America. And now this man, whose private career has lately overshadowed his tremendous importance as the world's best-trained monarch, is to live not two hours' flying distance from the United States, the well-spring of Bahama prosperity.

As nobody knows the whole story of the 29 islands, the cays, the rocks which make up the Bahama group, so no one can forelimit the possible activities of a man who has specialized, time and time again, in the role of goodwill ambassador. Tiled roofs and gardens aflame with gay flora set a vivid backdrop for his coming. He will have to deal with an annual rallying of wealthy American tourists, a colony of Britishers catering to American appreciation of good management, and a large population of picturesque but improvident Negroes. These will be his routine tasks. Beyond them, will he be figurehead or missionary?

When the duke relinquished his throne, he said that if needed he would return to the service of his country. In this crisis of liberty that is upon us, have circumstances offered him an opprtunity to serve both the Old World and the New?

Kimmis Hartley Hendrick in The Christian Science Monitor.

Old Friends

THEY TURNED into one of the many lanes from the macadam road in the Virginia valley and drove past a field of tall green corn and then past a field where eight or ten colored men and women were digging potatoes. At the end of the lane they stopped under the trees in front of the house which was of wood and painted white. As they got out of the car, George carrying the basket they had brought for the eggs, a wagon came into the lane from the barn and passed their car on its way to the potato field. On the back end of the wagon with his legs dangling sat a bronzed colored man in blue overalls. George didn't see him until his cousin said:

"There goes a friend of yours."

George turned, and his eyes met those of the man on the wagon. At once time moved back and George remembered his friend and saw that he was remembered in return. It was—it couldn't be possible, but it was—17 years since they had last met. George was in high school then and had gone to the country to work on his uncle's farm that summer. Unconsciously George called out the name of his friend.

"Zeke! Hey, Zeke!"

Zeke jumped down from the wagon.

They met in the lane and George shook his old friend's hand.

"Well, I'll be dadburned!" was all that Zeke could find to say. But his pleasure showed in his face. He wanted to know how George was getting along, and he asked questions politely, questions that sprang from a very genuine interest. They talked of George's cousins, his uncle's sons, who had been young men already in their own professions or business that summer, and of other cousins who came to visit on the farm. Zeke remembered them all. All their lives he had known those boys and, as long as George's uncle had lived, Zeke had been, in a sense, a member of the family. He missed George's uncle, he said, more than anybody, and though he liked the place where he was now he had certainly hated to see the old home break up. He just guessed, though, that there wasn't any help for that. George said no, that things change and there isn't much anybody can do.

"Do you remember when we used to hay in them two big alfalfa fields on both sides of the lane?" Zeke asked. "An' when we harvested wheat over 'crost the creek an' then thrashed up to the barn?"

George remembered. And, with this, all of Zeke's other jobs as a hired man came back. Zeke sitting in the door of the white-washed harness house olling bridles and harness on rainy days. Zeke mowing hay. Zeke spreading fertilizer on the fields in the spring when sometimes in earlier years George had made short visits before that summer. Zeke plowing, shocking wheat and stopping now and then in the long, hot, still afternoon to take a drink of waterfrom the bucket in the shade, but always last, after the others had drunk. The barn and the fields on the valley floor between those high blue ranges had been Zeke's domain.

And then George remembered the old red brick house, too. It had its own little "leather room" off the long lower side porch where the men of the family kept their boots and where they washed their hands when they came inside. There had been two rows of boxwoods up the walk and trumpet vines over both upper and lower porches. The house was very old. It had been built of brick burned in kilns on the place and its basement walls were three feet thick.

Talking with Zeke brought it all back, and George could see Zeke now at the kitchen table where he ate. There were the flowers in pots and tubs in the swept backyard, the creeking old grindstone, the washhouse, the pumphouse, the dairy, the old out-of-doors bake oven that had been used before the Civil War. These buildings were all of brick. Behind them was the house orchard, and there were two other orchards, one larger, one farther off on a hill. To one side of the henhouses was a woodyard that gave into the third orchard that stretched down to the mill race along one edge of the meadow. In the front and side yards were aspen and maple trees, and a large wooden swing stood near the paling fence. And always there was a string hammock between two of the trees. And out in the middle of one of the alfalfa fields was the family graveyard.

In the lot at the end of the lane were both the wagon shed and carriage house, and near them were several black walnut trees where turkeys used to roost. The summer George worked on the farm, though, there were already two automobiles in the family, and, aside from the farm wagons, only one bugey and the buckboard remained. Already the way was changing. But no one could deny that, with a large family and plenty of everything, it had been a good way of living.

"Yes, sir," Zeke said, "time moves on, all right. If I live and nothin' happens I'll be 50 on November 1st."

"Well, you don't look it," George said.

He told Zeke good-by and Zeke turned and walked down the lane to the potato field. He couldn't say how glad he was to have seen Zeke. Unconsciously Zeke had brought back to George the whole life of the farm, a life that millions of Americans have known and that leaves a mark of value obtainable in no other way.

When they drove down the lane George waved to Zeke, and Zeke, straightening for a moment, waved back.

The Amazing Mr. Tang Leang Li

TANG LEANG LI, vice minister of propaganda and ambassador on special assignment are the two titles acquired by one of the most interesting members of Japan's puppet regime at Nanking.

Mr. Tang is responsible for the recent deportation order issued against six Americans including a prominent former Washington, D. C., attorney, N. F. Allman, publisher of China's largest newspaper, the Shun Pao.

Others on the list include J. B. Powell, editor of the China Weekly Review, largest American weekly publication on the China coast; Carroll D. Alcott, China's most popular radio commentator; Randall Gould, correspondent for the Christian Science Monitor and editor of the Shanghai Evening Post.

No such deportation can be realized since under international treaty rights, the men would be tried in the United States District Court of Judge Myron Helmick at Shanghai. The United States has not recognized the Nanking regime of Wang Ching Wei, hence no official notice is taken of Tang's orders.

Tang's publicity work comes out of Nanking and Shanghai. Although assisted by Japanese authorities, the actual operators against American newspapers, magazines and radio are paid by the Wang Chang Wei faction which is said to obtain its funds from the Yokohama Specie Bank.

TANG WAS BORN in the Netherlands East Indies and has enjoyed Dutch passports. He was educated in Germany and England. He is said to have been an earnest student of the Nazi system, some parts of which have been adapted to operations in Nanking. Since Tang's recent association with the Nanking puppet regime, American newspaper men and publishing houses have had some thrilling events in their careers.

Allman's Shun Pao was bombed. The Shanghai Evening Post was twice bombed after Tang had publicly announced in the Metropolitan Hotel dining room that he would give the paper three months in which to change its editorial policy. The editorials, written by Gould, did not change and the bombs went off under the presses within two months. One policeman was killed and several bystanders were injured.

Alcott wears a bullet-proof vest in Shanghai's humidity, and Hallet Abend, after having been hit over the head with a revolver by two Japanese gunmen, moved into the International Settlement. Samuel H. Chang, a well-known American-educated Chinese newspaper manager was assassinated. Sammy was one of a list of 87 on the Nanking black list.

The vice minister of propaganda is about 35 years old. He has long had charge of Wang Ching Wei's English language publications. Practically all of his books were financed by the Chiang Kai Shek group when Wang Ching Wei was associated with the original government. Tang fled from Shanghai at the time of the Japanese occupation of the city in 1937, but returned a few months ago when Wang Ching Wei deserted his government and joined the Japanese army's "peace movement."

TANG ONCE PRODUCED books violently attacking the Japanese set-up in Manchuria. One, "The Puppet State of Manchuokuo," has such chapter titles as "Popular Opposition to the Puppet Regime," "Japanese Hegemony Over Asia," "Manchuokuo—an Asset or Liability;" and an attack on Emperor Henry Pu Yi characterizing his role as "an act of high treason against the Chinese Republic." Tang Leang Li for a number of years was a severe critic of the Japanese.

Tang is critical of the Washington Government. He charged Undersecretary of State Welles with "extraordinary behavior" in Europe "dodging about from capital to capital canvassing enmity against Wang Ching Wei."

Referring to the American Marines in Shanghai, Tang spoke of them as "unwanted and unnecessary foreign troops which were enabling certain foreigners and also a number of Chinese renegades to carry on seditious activities . . . in a manner undreamt of in other countries." This followed a report that the Fourth Marine Corps planned to close Japanese gambling and dope dens.

Tang has been one of China's most prolific book producers—first under Chiang Kai Shek and now under Japanese influence—a Jekyll and Hyde reporter.

IN ADDITION to his book work, he runs a paper called the People's Tribune, and the China News Agency which have been chiefly responsible for the distribution of anti-American propaganda.

If the Japanese ever get his English language books translated, they will probably give him a Nanking court-martial and remove him in a wooden kimona, for, in direly prophetic words, Tang, now the agent of the Japanese, wrote in his book on Manchuokuo, that "Japan has shown herself prepared to go to any lengths to bring about international dissension and chaos in China, to cripple China physically and economically by her illegal occupation of Manchuria, and to place every possible obstacle in the way of China's realizing her natural aspirations to build up a peaceful and prosperous state."

Tang Leang Li and his associates have formulated the Chinese News Agency at Nanking, which aimed at absorbing all domestic and foreign news agencies, a pattern used in Japan, but not to date entirely successful.

Japanese papers are supposed to use Domei, the official agency. However, Domei, while having access to most foreign press associations, does not distribute all news received—only items suited and properly translated for domestic use. Japanese publishers, notwithstanding possible court action, have sent their own men abroad or made separate news association contracts to obtain material which they know Domei will not provide them. They may not print all the news, but they do get the news, and privately they see that it gets around to certain high civilian quarters.

Tang and his group took the Japanese pattern and in a great ceremony, announced a new news agency. The object was to buy up and control all incoming services that they might influence foreign press associations in their stories sent from China. Tang proposes that all news, in and out of China, must pass through his agency. As papers are too small to subscribe to a general news service, the deficit is reported made up from Japanese propaganda funds. Mr. Tang stated that the foreign news agencies would be paid for their reports from abroad, but that all distribution in China would be controlled from Nanking. This would not affect the treaty port and the International Settlement at Shanghai, so Mr. Tang declared that an exception would be made in the case of newspapers in Shanghai, and the press associations, "pending rendition of the foreign settlements."

Tang is for denouncing all foreign treaties.

ON THE OCCASION of the inauguration of the new Wang Ching Wei government, Tang's publicity ministry arranged for foreign correspondents to attend at Nanking. Although they saw nothing of interest in the silent city, nor were they able to obtain interesting material other than handouts, Tang lectured them on how they should handle their news. On the train from Shanghai to Nanking were officials of the government, the Japanese president of the Chinese railroad, Tang's men and the foreign correspondents, all headed for the inauguration. Just outside Nanking the train ran off the track.

The Japanese hastened to explain the "rails had separated." Meantime, troops were called out to find the "insincere bandits" who produced this news item for the foreign correspondents, who immediately telephoned the story through. Tang not having a press release on this event, and did not think fast enough to stop the phone conversations.

Secretary of State Cordell Hull moves Tang to comments which at times embarrass even his Japanese wire-pullers. A puppet paper under Tang derisively remarked that Mr. Hull's declaration on conditions in China "is more farcical than the grotesque antics of Charlie Chaplin.

"Mr. Hull," the Tang statement said, "should have realized that by this time the Chinese people abhor and despise the false utterances of American statesmen."

To add to Mr. Tang's dignity, he was invested as "ambassador on special assignment," a title which he used immediately in attacking American policy, foreign correspondents, radio stations and American papers published in Shanghai. He then denounced Mr. Hull's statement and America as a "champion of foreign privilege . . . in utter disregard of all the tenets of international courtesy and good will."

Tang is especially bitter at American editorial cartoons. These stir him more than editorials. Many Chinese newspapers not in the occupied zones republish American cartoons unfavorable to Japan or the Wang Ching Wei movement. Illustrations are easier for the readers and require but a few lines of translation. Readers clip these and pass them into the occupied areas where the Chinese, with their great sense of humor, revel in American caricatures. Tang wants this stopped.

At one of Tang's press conferences, which are corkers, he declared his articles, books and newspapers were designed to "demolish the fairy tales about the traditional friendship of America and to show the Chinese people what the true United States attitude had been since the Treaty of Wanghia in 1844." He is busy also in attacking American loans to China.

TANG OCCASIONALLY has himself interviewed. The interview, written by himself, is printed in his own newspapers and handed to foreign press associations and newspapers. He has succeeded in having most of them printed—the local press at Shanghai prints what he says in his own interview, but the editorial comment, headlines, cartoons and reaction exasperate Tang, who says they must not react in this fashion. This is part of the irritants which have caused him to seek to oust the six Americans.

On conducted newspaper tours Tang goes into rages, arrives in the hotel dining room and "tells the correspondents off" as they describe his scene. Tang asked them how they liked his arrangements to cover the Wang Ching Wei inauguration. One of them, a European, bearing in mind the secretiveness, replied:

"We have not been able to cover the inauguration of the new regime, but you can be sure we will all be here to report its burial."

Conscription

Will The Draft Give America An Efficient Army?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have been both amazed and bewildered by the debate in Congress, and the press comment, on the Burke-Wadsworth bill. The entire argument seems to concern the principle of conscription! All this storm of words, all these reams of paper about something that, in the last analysis, is not debatable at all! And never a word about the merits, if any, of the Burke-Wadsworth bill.

One of the fundamentals of democracy holds that each man must serve as best he is able to protect the community against any aggressor. If a man has freedom, he also has the obligation to defend that freedom. The choice is not his, but that of the community. If the community has reason to fear attack, it automatically becomes the duty of everyone to perform that job which the community decides he is best fitted to do. He may not like it, but that is unimportant.

It must be remembered that the liberty of democracy is not license for every man to do as he pleases, but is the liberty of common consent. Thus a refusal on the part of any individual to serve in the common defense is a rejection of the public trust placed in him as his obligation in return for the right of liberty.

We all admit that there is in this world a threat to our national integrity. Then it follows that, since that threat, however remote, does exist, it is our duty to prepare to meet it. Now, it is true that during our lifetime the character of war has undergone a tremendous change. Defense has become a matter of experts, not minute men.

It might be true, as was said in the last war, that a "million men will spring to arms over night." But, for all practical purposes, the million men may as well spring into the nearest lake for a nice refreshing swim. They would be entirely useless in a mechanical war.

So it follows that there must be extensive training before the crisis arrives, and one must conclude that, in the event of insufficient voluntary enlistments, conscription must be applied.

But a conscripted citizen still has his rights. He has the right, in fact it is his duty, to insist that he is being drafted purely for defense, and that his service is being wisely used.

It is with the second of these rights that I am immediately concerned. I am not convinced of the usefulness of the Burke-Wadsworth bill. The only argument that I have as yet heard advanced in its behalf is "we may be attacked." But this, I insist, is an argument for defense, and not for the bill under consideration.

There is a grave danger that this bill will be passed, in some form or another, by the Congress without the shadow of investigation of its merits. Its passage will be hailed as a great victory for "national defense," and if the crisis ever comes, we'll find that we have no defense at all. The country will have been sold a pocketful of dreams.

Recently a proponent of the bill mentioned France as a horrible example of unpreparedness. He warned that we must avoid a like situation. Agreed. But he inferred that the answer is contained in the Burke-Wadsworth bill. I doubt it.

On completion of the program, we will have an Army of 450,000,000 men, each with a year's training. Each will be able to march well in parades, to use a bayonet, to place a bullet reasonably near a target, and to play his part in the use of artillery. But France had an army of double that number, with two years' training, who could do those things well, and they were beaten in a month!

Is half of France's war effort our defense? The Burke-Wadsworth bill would seem to say so.

War is mechanical nowadays, and we'll be kidding only ourselves if we believe that we can have an efficient mechanical Army with a mere year's training. Mussolini won't believe it, the Japanese won't believe it, and, above all, Hitler won't believe it. He knows how long it takes to create a truly efficient machine. He trained his intensively for five years!

An army of foot soldiers such as seems the purpose of the Burke-Wadsworth bill wouldn't even make him stop and think. But suppose that on landing here, he would be faced with an Army superior to his! Would he try it?

I don't know the answer to the problem. But I do believe there is an answer; an answer with both justice and security. And I believe that the answer can be found if the Congress will take the trouble to look for it.

And I'll give Congress a hint. The solution is not in the mud they're throwing around.

Excerpts From Our Letters

France And U. S.

This Nation at the present moment is in the same category that France was in six months ago. While the Germans, armed to the teeth, were pounding at the very back door of France, France was too engrossed in business, worldly pleasures and vices to do more than shrug her shoulders at the oncoming Germans. And today France is paying in servitude for her indifference, her nonchalance. The Germans are prepared and are still preparing. I submit that the youth of these United States, the men from 21 to 31 are so busy running after women, driving automobiles and attending gin parties that the very mention of the duties of a soldier to them is like taking a dose of poison.—John W. Herndon, jr., Washington.

Need For Training

Wars aren't the same as before. Only the trained soldier is of any use. This training won't be a picnic for anyone. Maybe it won't exactly suit the convenience of 99 out of 100, but whether it does or not, it is a duty all men should consider a privilege, should such a course be deemed necessary—and it is more necessary now than ever before.—H. L. D., Washington.

Applauds Lindbergh

It did my democracy-loving heart good to read Col. Lindbergh's latest speech. At least one American in public life still has the courage to volve his sincere convictions when these convictions do not fall under the approval of regimenting propagandists.—L. E. Warner, Washington.

President's Powers

The President of the United States, true enough, is the commander-in-chief of the Army and Navy, yet he cannot, as charged by some uninformed Members of Congress, lead this Nation into war, as such an inglorious deed belongs to the Congress alone.—Harry Daniels, Washington.

"Plenty Of Time"

Apropos of the pending conscription bill for teaching men in time of peace to be soldiers: "Why take the trouble to learn to swim before you fall in the water? Will there not be plenty of time to learn after you have fallen in?"—Harry P. Huse, Vice Admiral, U. S. Navy, Ret., Washington.

The Dove

One of the first types of airplanes ever manufactured in Germany was named the "Taube," meaning "dove." What a travesty on evolution that a "dove," the emblem of peace, should father such "hawks" and "vultures" as bat and screech around through European skies today! — Clara Louise John, Washington.

Elephants Note

The proceedings pushed through during the recent so-called Democratic Convention were enough to make elephants stand up on their hind-legs and I hope they do.—Gladys McAllister, Washington.

Prefers Volunteering

I am opposed to all military conscription plans especially in time of peace. I believe an improved voluntary enlistment plan would meet all present needs.—Phyllis Tripplehorn, Bluffton Ohio.

A Deluge?

Must there be a deluge to wipe out the debris of evil that chokes the channels of world amity or is there time—and the will—for each one of us to do his part to clean away the obstructions? None knows the answer—the hour grows late and the storm whistles near. But it seems worth a try—at least some despairing heart might be strengthened by an encouraging word, some hard road made easier by a helpful hand. Small though each one of our parts may be, yet they, all together, make up the whole.—Franklin W. Marsh, Washington.

Pepper's Remarks

I wish to protest against Senator Pepper's unjust accusations against Col. Lindbergh. It is a disgrace to America that the dignity of the House and Senate should be used for mud-slinging. There is nothing in Lindbergh's speech (which is short and to the point) to justify such an attack.—Cordelia Stewart, Maryland.

Preparation

Now is the time for all Christians to come to the aid of their country and fellow men. The time seems to have come when all men are preparing in every conceivable physical way to die and to kill others, but who is preparing for death in a spiritual way?—Mrs. M. C. Bailey, Bessemer, Ala.

Prophecy

Just to remind you that I stated in a letter to you, dated January 25, 1940, "No third term for President Roosevelt," but you editors are still speculating as to what the result will be. You still think it will be Roosevelt. Guess again.—James Wadsworth, New York City.

The Third Term

I feel President Roosevelt has betrayed the Democratic Party. He should have had courage enough to say he would not run a year ago and let the party work for another man instead of trying to be an American dictator.—Democratic Housewife, Washington.

Sees Hysteria

Hasn't our hysterical brain trust forgotten to call out the Boy Scouts and Campfire Girls? Never in my 65 years have I seen a country go completely out of its mind as we have done over a war in Europe.—Eugene Hudgins, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Our Maginot Line

In these days of streamlined warfare, the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, long regarded by our strategists as our first line of defense, are almost as valueless as the Maginot Line proved itself to be.—Harry Daniels, Washington.

Fuss And Jabber

In reading over the doings of Congress, I was thoroughly disgusted at the fuss and jabber among some of them. They were worse than school children, calling each other names and making faces.—M. F. H., Warrenton, Va.

Approves Draft

I would like to express my opinion on the draft bill, pending, for an Army. I say all red-blooded Americans approve of the bill.—Republican, Massachusetts.

Lindbergh

A Tribute to the Famous Aviator's Frankness

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: So violent has been the criticism of Col. Lindbergh's defiance in face of a public poisoned by propaganda single-mindedness, and so profound is my esteem for the courage of his ideal, that I am impelled to offer a rebuttal in defense of that pioneer of the air. He dared once to defy the infinity of space; but his courage now, to contest ideas alone, is worthy of far greater praise. Such fortitude is an achievement far superior to his past glory.

I desire especially to refute the logic of R. J. Klyn's recent letter pertaining to Lindbergh's assertion that the United States cannot solve the problems of Europe through interference. Mr. Klyn presents the hypothesis that only by the charter of liberties of England and the United States, the Magna Carta, may a solution develop. There is no substantial proof that such a document is the crux of an ideal form of government. England boasted the Magna Carta when our forefathers escaped to the New World in search of freedom.

The gentleman further reflects, "The state is not enough. Above the state are higher laws by which both states and individuals are judged. That is our creed in the United States and in the British empire; but it is not Hitler's." I challenge that statement.

Does Mr. Klyn really believe that the German nation is at friction with Hitler in his ideal of restoration of the rights deprived through the Treaty of Versailles? Was justice present when that ignominious document was signed, plunging a vanquished people into famine and abject humiliation and stuffing further the pockets of France and England already gloating in colonial expansion? Or mayhap the gentleman believes that justice would again pilot our manhood across thousands of miles to destruction, in search of a mythical enemy who has expressed no desire for our enmity.

Has Mr. Klyn forgotten the futility of the World War, when propaganda such as the prevalent anti-Hitler stuff swept a slumbering nation into a war to "Save the world for democracy?" So they enjoyed masking the real cause which was to save the pocketbooks of the rich through the blood of the innocent.

Who are we to presume that Germany does not have a right to her own form of government? We should be highly insulted were the criticism reversed. We allow current atrocities concerning treatment of the Jews to warp our respect for the German government.

Col. Lindbergh is not a Nazi. He views through an unbiased heart. Only petty brains indulge in slandering him. The real enemies of liberty are those who view only the surface and poison the mind with the lie. No real American can possibly uphold intervention (excepting in self-defense) and in the same breath claim allegiance to the ideals of our revolutionary forefathers, who left the intrigues of the Old World behind. The very foundation of the Monroe Doctrine is based on the philosophy that we shall deserve respect from the Old World by our own example of nonintervention in their affairs.

BRUTUS BAIRD.
Washington, Aug. 10.

Court Appointments

Although President Roosevelt has more than an even chance to be reelected, there are many thousands of voters who will not forget that he appointed such comparatively unqualified men to the Supreme Court of the United States as Black and Murphy when two mental giants like Herbert Hoover and Hiram Johnson were passed up.—A Reader, Washington.

The Hemisphere

It makes me laugh when I read how some of our "paternal politicians" grow red in the face shouting that we must be prepared to fight if poor little South America is attacked by the totalitarians. I believe those boys down there would put up a sizable scrap if any nations would try it, and give us plenty of time to go to their assistance, providing they asked for it.—W. E. Long, Washington.

Almazan's Threat

By Betty Kirk

Mexico A Second Spain?

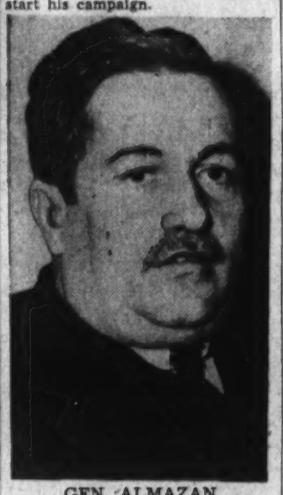
THE THREAT that Mexico may turn overnight into another Spain looms larger daily. This appalling prospect increases when the Havana statement of Gen. Juan Andreu Almazan is understood in full through the interpretation put upon it by Almazon spokesmen here.

Gen. Almazan, they reveal, plans to direct his campaign to become Mexico's next president from the friendly borders of Guatemala. It will be a radio campaign at the beginning. When the time is ripe the General will lead his followers in person to seize the power from the Avila Comacho party which will, in September, declare itself the legally elected government of the people.

Gen. Franco, it may be recalled, began his campaign to seize the government of Spain, from the friendly shores of North Africa. His first instrument was the radio, and when it had prepared the way he flew across the Straits of Gibraltar to lead his forces in person. The result was Spain's two years of bloody civil war.

In the light of this parallel the Almazan statement from Havana, made over the radio on the night of August 12, assumes great significance. After assuring his listeners, estimated here at 1,000,000, that "On December 1 I will take the oath of office as President of the republic, fulfilling the almost unanimous mandate of the people," he added:

"My followers can have the absolute certainty that neither the American governments nor their people will give the least moral or material aid to those who pretend to usurp the power, destroying the democratic ideal of the New World, only in order to comply with their role as servants of the totalitarian nations." This instantly raises the question of what American governments he meant. His spokesmen here reveal that Guatemala has offered him sanctuary from which to start his campaign.



GEN. ALMAZAN

The violently anti-Almazan El Popular comments that "We do not doubt that precisely among the servants of the totalitarian states who head some dictatorial governments of America, Almazan will find friends among the workers because Almazan today aspires to become the continental leader of the enemies of democracy."

TO GEN. ALMAZAN "totalitarian" has generally been synonymous with Communist, and he has waged his campaign on a program of anticommunism. Gen. Franco, history records, waged an "anti-Communist" campaign. He had the backing of the Catholic Church and the big land holders, whose power had been shorn by the republican government. He successfully led a split in the army, and with the backing of the church and Germany and Italy was able to destroy the republican regime.

Gen. Almazan has the backing of the Catholic Church in Mexico because he has promised to restore its power and reopen church schools. He claims to have 60 per cent of the army to support him and he has a vast popular following, as demonstrated in the recent elections. His position is even stronger than Franco's was at the beginning of Spain's civil war, for his support does not come from the land-holding class alone.

Gen. Almazan conducted his campaign throughout with an appeal for support and recognition from the United States Government. He kept representatives in Washington and New York to win this support. That it has not been given is assumed from his present plan to lead a revolution from Guatemala and the southern states, instead of from the north, as has been predicted. To lead successfully a revolt from the north he would have to have the aid, or at least the neutrality, of the United States Government.

An Almazan spokesman revealed several weeks ago that if the general did not receive support from the United States that he would take aid where he could get it. The most obvious place to turn to is the Fascist powers, who desire above all else to cause chaos in Mexico.

WHETHER this truly represents the sentiments of Gen. Almazan is doubtful for he has outspokenly condemned the Nazi and Fascist regimes, accusing his opponents of being in their pay. The real danger behind his party lies in the Falange Espanola, to which many of his followers are wholly sympathetic, if not actual members. What Gen. Almazan's own stand on the Falange is has never been made clear.

That the Falange looks to him as a leader, willy nilly, is revealed in a dispatch sent from Madrid on August 13. It reports that "ABC," which defines the foreign policy of Gen. Franco, publishes the picture of Gen. Almazan with the significant caption, "The Future President of Mexico Is a Friend of the Caudillo."

Almazan, "ABC" declares, "will begin the reconstruction of Mexico on the same lines as Gen. Franco uses in restoring Spain," ie. with the aid of "Falange Espanola" and in league with Germany, Italy and Japan.

The spearhead for Fascism in Latin America is the "Falange Espanola," the mystic counterpart of Nazism, which is the most potent force behind General Francisco Franco. It is the front behind which the totalitarian governments work here because with its strong ties with the Church, and with the local moneyed Spanish colonies, it has a sympathetic and ready made entry into the heart of Catholic Latin America.

"Falange Espanola," although officially banned by the Mexican government over a year ago, today operates openly in Mexico. Its mouthpiece is "Boletin de Unidad," a weekly published by the Franquista Spanish colony, which exultantly publicizes and proclaims the program of the Falange for the spiritual reconquest of Latin America by Spain and the parallel destruction of the Anglo-Saxon influence here.

IT IS POSSIBLE, and even probable, that Almazan himself has neither affiliations nor sympathy with the Falange. But members of his party do. Moreover, it is openly said in Almazan groups that if he should fail the party as a leader that the movement will go on. It is the ambitions and programs of those behind Almazan that offer the real threat of Fascist penetration here.

In the event of a putsch led by Almazan from Guatemala it is these Fascist forces and all their totalitarian allies which would be the quickest to seize advantage of the confusion and disorder to gain control of the Almazan movement. The profund seriousness of this possibility lies in the fact that the Almazan movement is a full fledged, highly organized, and apparently well financed organization which has won the backing of the people, fed up with and revolting against the extreme leftism of recent years. Again the parallel with Spain holds true.

Discontent and disunion, now rampant within the administration's Mexican Revolutionary Party also reflect the chaos of Republican Spain prior to the civil war. There is a wide open split between leftists and rightists within the P. R. M. which is expected to come to a head in the struggle for control of the Congress through the seating of the new deputies and senators. Labor trouble is seething throughout the country and the whole state of confusion provides fertile ground for serious trouble.

That the government is aware of the Almazan threat to begin his campaign by radio broadcasting, inciting his followers to action by long distance leadership, is apparent from the vigilance being exercised over radio activity during recent weeks. A special group of radio technicians have been trained to intercept messages sent by pirate stations in order to discover any plots for revolt. This corps of technicians, operating throughout the republic, goes into action this week.

The Mexican people today understand as little of what is happening to them as the Spanish people did when the civil war broke out. The popular discontent is genuine, the turning to Almazan as a leader is sincere, but no loyal Mexican could possibly conceive of delivering his country into the hands of international fascism as a seqkuel to domestic discontent.

Whether General Almazan himself understands the full significance of his actions and backing is doubtful for he is a Mexican patriot who has spent 30 years in the service of his country. Neither did General Francisco Franco realize, when he flew blithely across the Straits of Gibraltar to lead "a week-end revolt," that he was plunging his country into two years of civil war from which she would emerge exhausted and terror stricken, and bound hand and foot to Berlin and Rome.

The parallel between the two military leaders is so clear, the similarity of Mexico's events today with those leading up to Spain's civil war is so startling, and the known designs of international fascism upon the United States' southern neighbor are so apparent, that no unprejudiced observer can view the immediate future here with anything less than distruct and apprehension.

Our Needs

What this country needs just now is not so much a good 5-cent cigar as a few good 5-cent international diplomats who might in a few weeks dissipate all dangers of war, and a few good engineers and city and country planners at home who have knowledge, a little vision and a grain of common sense.—Karl Spiess Robinson, Mount Rainier, Md.

From An Objector

I hope that The Post is taking a strong stand against conscription. I am a conscientious objector. I therefore believe that war or preparation for war is absolutely wrong. One cannot combat evil with evil.—May Walton, Los Angeles, Calif.

This curving sea beach is a cryptic page
Written in many tongues. Here one will find
Relics of fin and shell from which his mind
Rebuilds the story of a primal age.

Another reader calls the shore a stage,
A setting for the play of waves and blind,
Tragedian gusts that rant and leave behind
The scattered properties that feel their rage.

But, as he walks, the dreaming poet reads
A tale of beauty only: blue of sky
Serene above its vast blue counterpart.
The message of this hour alone he heeds,
Records the shining on his inner eye,
Transcribes the song of billows on his heart.

A WEEK-END REVIEW OF CURRENT PUBLICATIONS

Hapless Horsemen

By John T. Apple

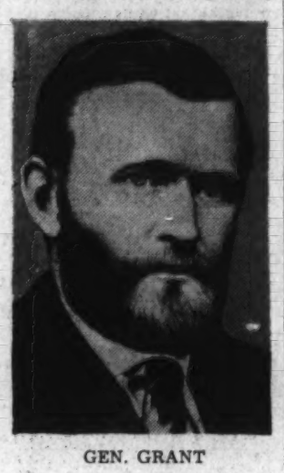
IT WOULD HAVE been well for Ulysses S. Grant and his subsequent fame if he had retired forever from the public eye after he received Gen. Lee's surrender at Appomattox. He had risen from a position not only of obscurity but from something approaching disgrace after his forced resignation from the Army, to the command of all the Union forces. He had behind him an unbroken string of brilliant victories, beginning at Fort Henry and Fort Donalson, continuing through Shilah, Corinth, Vicksburg, and Chickamauga, and culminating in his Virginia campaign.

He was hailed by the North as the most successful and the greatest of the military leaders in a war remarkable for the caliber of the commanders on both sides. He was respected by the South for the consideration with which he treated its vanquished army.

If his last public act had been the baring of his head on Sunday afternoon in April, 1865, as Gen. Lee rode back to tell his defeated forces that the men might keep their horses and the officers their side arms, Gen. Grant would be remembered simply as one of the greatest of America's soldiers. As it was, his name was a synonym for many years for the very nadir of political corruption, and in the South it bore full blame for the senseless brutality of Reconstruction.

GEN. GRANT lives again in Miss Todd's pages as a man of unaffected simplicity, of deep sincerity, and of abysmal ignorance concerning everything not pertaining to the military profession. He scrupulously refrained from taking any part in the campaign which led to his election, and he accepted the Presidency because he believed that the people's wishes laid a sacred obligation upon him. He could truthfully say in his Inaugural address, "The office has come to me unsought; I commence its duties untrammeled. I bring to it a conscious desire and determination to fill it to the best of my ability to the satisfaction of the people." He had no program, no clear conception of the duties and problems that lay before him, and little acquaintance with the leaders of his party.

It was perhaps natural that the man who was largely responsible for the victorious prosecution of the war should refuse to ask or to accept any advice concerning the multitude of appointments which filled his first days in office. He chose men, not because they were generally recognized as especially qualified for their position, but because they were his friends or were recommended to him by his friends, and Grant prized loyalty in friendship above all other virtues. With the appointment of his Cabinet it became plain that no basic unity underlay Grant's action. He had simply chosen seven men, held together not even by a nonpartisan unity.



GEN. GRANT

In the succeeding days of his Administration a rift developed between Grant and his Congress. He was able to provide energetic leadership in a field so new to him; while an intelligent policy toward the South should have been put into effect, Grant devoted all his energies to the proposed annexation of San Domingo.

His re-election, which he saw as the people's vindication of his first term, depended more upon the opposition's colossal stupidity in nominating such a man as Horace Greeley and upon the Administration's capitalization of the successful settlement of the "Alabama" claims than upon any general enthusiasm for Grant himself.

The inefficiency of Grant's first term was followed by the open scandals of the second term, culminating in the exposure of the whisky ring and the coining of the expression "Grantism" to denote blatant corruption. It was abundantly clear from the inventigations leading to the uncovering of these malodorous conditions that Grant was personally guiltless. He was not consciously involved in any questionable transactions; he was merely the victim of a misplaced and excessive confidence in those he considered his friends. The scandals, the maladministration, the corruption of Grant's Presidency are not an indictment of Grant, who was a man of integrity although of limited ability: they are an indictment of an electorate so gullible as to believe that a man with no previous experience in public administration, no matter what his abilities in other fields, can adequately perform the duties of the Presidency.

AFTER HIS triumphal tour round the world, which did much to blot out the memory of the scandals of his Administration, he made a third attempt at the Presidency, but he failed to secure the nomination. Now if ever, one would think, he might retire to a peaceful obscurity. But again his misplaced confidence in his friends betrayed him. He was persuaded to lend his name to the investment firm of Grant and Wood, a fraud which failed to the tune of $17,000,000 invested in it on the strength of the general's name.

Grant spent his closing years writing his memoirs, tortured by the cancer of the throat which finally killed him.

Miss Todd's biography is written almost in the form of fiction, but it is solidly based on facts. It skims lightly over the more controversial aspects of Grant's life. Nevertheless it presents a clear and sympathetic picture of a great leader betrayed by his own popularity, thrust into an eminence for which he was not fitted. It is accurate without being stodgy, and vastly readable without seeking the sensational.

Summer Summary of Verse

Returning from a three-weeks' vacation, I find my desk heavy laden with summer poetry. A columnist I know says that of all the seasons summer is the most prolific so far as verse received is concerned. For once, spring is far behind. (Note that the special poetry number of the Saturday Review of Literature is dated August 10.) One explanation of this phenomenon has been given thus:

> To escape the heat, of course, is
> Why the poets most in summer
> (When you'd think they'd be much mummer)
> Mount upon their winged horses,
> And fly to air-conditioned climes.

First, a trilogy of $3 anthologies from the firm of Henry Harrison, New York, which require little comment: "Listen, My Children," poems for boys and girls, edited by Gertrude Harrison; "The Greek Letter," an anthology of fraternity and sorority verse, edited by Helen Reese, and "Poems for Mother," edited by Katie May Gill. Still another collection from the same indefatigable publisher is "Poems About Maine" ($1.50), edited by Sheldon Christian. Mr. Harrison also has recently inaugurated a series of 32-page poetry pamphlets (40 cents), in which new poets are given a hearing. Seven of these are at hand, one of the best being "The Heart's Renewal," by Stanley Richardson, a young Englishman.

The Prairie Press, Muscatine, Iowa, offers (at $2.50) a long poem called "Action, Didn't It," by Philip Conrad. It is described as seven variations on a synthesis, whatever that may mean. It is, I am afraid, more cleverness than poetry, certainly a vigorous attempt to interpret the "spiritual poverty, chaos, sprawling formlessness, greed and dirt and waste of America." The poem is brilliantly if not profoundly done, with a sort of sprawling formlessness and dirt of its own.

In contrast, there is Oscar Williams' "The Man Coming Toward You" (Oxford, $2), which contains enough metrical meat for several seasons. This poet's main burden, the spiritual breakdown of our times, is not greatly different from Mr. Conrad's above, but Mr. Williams does not write to show off. He writes from a genuine poetic impulse that essentially resolves itself into song, even in times of dissonance and despair.

I had never heard of Amy Murray until I read about her on the jacket of her new book, "November Hereabout" (Holt, $2). A septuagenarian, she lives over in Rockland County, N. Y., neighbor to Maxwell Anderson, who contributes a preface. She used to play the clairschach and sing Gaelic songs of western Scotland. Now she has a garden, "an acre paradise of herbs, shrubs, and flowers between a curve of brook and a curve of road." But from her poems and anecdotes you can almost guess these things about Amy Murray without being told, so revealing are they. "She keeps about her," writes Mark Van Doren, "the dry, clean, herb odor of integrity." Her book is covered with oak leaves. There has been no finer lyric written in many a year than her poem called "The Yellow Leaf," beginning—

> On the thirty-first of June
> I shall put my harp in tune.

There is a good deal of music, vigor, and humor in "The Gap of Brightness" (Macmillan, $1.25), by F. R. Higgins, an Irish poet described as the latest of Yeats' school of younger men. When one gets sated with polemic palaver and funeral elegies for a lost world, these Irish lyrics, ranging from "Cradle Song" to "Grace Before Beer," make a wholesome and welcome antedote. Had I room I would quote the whole of "Muineen Water," which ends with this quiet stanza—

> But when the sedges fling their bridge of whispers
> On waves no moon has hooked, then surely find,
> As that lake sinks into its own dim presence,
> A dark calm sinks into my mind.

New England's Cultural Autumn

Van Wyck Brooks Describes Age Of Howells

By George F. Wicher

JOHN LAFARGE, the painter, feeling among the Japanese mountains the miraculousness and the closeness of nature, reproached his traveling companion, Henry Adams, for his incessant habit of detached mental analysis. "'Adams, you reason too much,' he said one night. He dreamed, after one of their arguments, that he heard the mind of Adams making a great clatter in the room. He awoke—it was only a rat."

If Hawthorne rather than LaFarge had been the recorder of this anecdote, he might have added, as he did when he noted a passing fancy about a person catching fireflies and trying to kindle his household fire with them, "It would be symbolical of something."

It might be held to symbolize, for example, the hyperactivity of the New England mind during the 50 years between the Civil War and the World War, when one could dream that the intellectual life centering in Boston and Cambridge was as busy and fruitful as ever, but waking find that only a mechanical grinding was going on. The northeast corner was counting for less and less in the growth of a roaring industrial Nation.

When William Dean Howells came to Boston in 1886 to continue the "apostolic successor" of Lowell and Holmes he found a community that already stood on the brink of devastating changes. New England felt in danger of being overwhelmed. Many of its native sons had been lost in the war, many had gone to the West never to return. Boston and Cambridge and the regions around, as well as the mill towns, were filling up with immigrants of alien tradition and acquisitive ways. Where Puritan crusaders like Theodore Parker had once gone forth to war against special privilege and greed in all its forms, the sentries of State street were soon to stand on guard, satisfied that all was well so long as they were not molested. Howells himself was to see the beginnings of many of these changes before he discreetly moved to New York in the middle '80s, leaving the meticulous Thomas Bailey Aldrich as guardian of the faith. By the middle of the following decade, Prof. Barrett Wendell at Harvard was unhesitatingly looking to Europe as the source of every worthy cultural tradition, and grudgingly, if at all, admitted the existence of an American tradition of a very inferior kind. About 1900 the enervation of New England had reached an all-time low.

Mr. Brooks has traced the sapping of Yankee morale in much greater detail than can be indicated here, including in the survey not only Boston and Cambridge, which properly occupy the center of attention, but also several outlying and lesser literary centers. Literature and learning were indeed widely diffused. Portsmouth alone in 1885 could claim 40 poets, living and dead, and almost every village from Kittery to Salem had its singer or its literary association at least. Harriet Prescott Spofford shrank from the sea at Newburyport, Celia Thaxter exulted in it on the Isles of Shoals, and Lucy Larcom faced the mills of Lowell from Beverly. These were but the more gifted ladies who revolved in the orbit of the aging Whittier at Amesbury; there were others less gifted and more moony.

VAN WYCK BROOKS

CONCORD, now that Hawthorne and Thoreau were dead and Emerson was growing amiably vague, was given over to an Alcott newly furbished by his daughter's success but still a frowsy sort of Plato of the School of Philosphy. Newport attracted a more fashionable coterie led by Julia Ward Howe and her husband and Thomas Wentworth Higginson, and it was there also that "Shepherd Tom" Hazard broke into print at 85 with the "Johnny-Cake Papers" and Helen Hunt emerged from bereavement to become the most admired of the women poets. Aside from the literary group, John LaFarge and William James studied painting with William Morris Hunt. Andover, a citadel of religious orthordoxy, produced Elizabeth Stuart Phelps, and Hartford, another citadel, sheltered, besides Mark Twain, Mrs. Stowe and Rose Terry Cooke, the pioneer tellers of veritable rural New England stories. Literary culture lay just under the surface anywhere; the skipper of a ferry on provocation; a farmer watering a professor's horse might pause to put him straight on passage from Montesquieu. In suggesting the quality of these regional backgrounds Mr. Brooks is at his very best.

As one studies with Mr. Brooks the spiritual climate of later nineteenth century New England, one feels with mounting excitement the sense of an element of permanence under the shifting surfaces of the age, as though there were something in the Yankee nature not to be conquered by the vicissitudes of time and chance. "Never was there a community," wrote Mrs. Stowe,

Volume Hailed As Better Than 'The Flowering'

"where the roots of common life shot down so deeply and were so intensely grappled around things sublime and eternal." Mr. Brooks does not quote this observation, but he seems to have rediscovered the fact.

The element of permanence, of persistence in the face of hostile circumstances that Mr. Brooks detects even in the autumnal days of New England's decline, may often be traced to the religious tradition of the region. Vestiges of the Puritan attitude to life remained imprinted after Puritan theology had been discarded, and among other qualities ingrained into the true Yankee nature was an uncompromising adherence to the soul's highest leading, the trait that Hawthorne so powerfully emphasizes in the heroine of "The Scarlet Letter." This trait was as likely to show itself in a conscious agnostic as in a conscious believer; it is the counterpart of "Quaker stubbornness." In not allowing sufficiently for the survival of the Puritan strain, Mr. Brooks betrays one of the few blind spots in his remarkably broad outlook. In comparison with his thorough understanding of social and esthetic values, his sense of religious value is superficial.

Here, parenthetically, it may be remarked that "New England: Indian Summer" is so obviously a book to turn back to again and again, often in search of a particular page, that an index consisting merely of a list of names followed by a list of undifferentiated page numbers is lamentably inadequate to serve the purpose that a proper index for such a volume should fulfill.

The only other shortcoming of Mr. Brooks' highly successful study is implicit in the plan of writing a regional history of New England literature during a period when the writings of one section of the country cannot, without serious mutilation, be separated from the whole of our national literature.

It is almost an impertinence, however, to speak of limitations of design or execution in relation to a book that stands so far on the plus side as this. Mr. Brooks has handled an enormous amount of informational material about authors, painters, musicans, architects, wits, society women, religious leaders and the vast field full of folk that make up a literary milieu with an accuracy that a mere scholar must envy, so that in several readings of the book I have noted only a few immaterial slips, such as speaking of Emily Dickinson's "seven weeks in Washington" instead of "in Washington and Philadelphia" and "North of Boston" as Robert Frost's "first" book.

The Man Who Wrote 'The Harbor'

By M. R. Werner

Ernest Poole has led a full and useful life of romantic groping. At the beginning of the twentieth century he was doing settlement work on New York's East Side, and on the last page of his autobiography he tells us of his intention to go abroad again and observe another war. In between he saw poverty, vice, disease, crime, strikes, two Russian revolutions, the German front during the last World War, fascism in Italy and the Popular Front in France. He calls his account of his experiences and emotions "The Bridge" to symbolize the transition "from yesterday to the vast confusion of today."

Ernest Poole grew up in a Presbyterian family in Chicago during the 1880's and 1890's. His father had a seat on the Board of Trade and operated successfully in wheat and corn. Up the street lived the McCormicks and Judge Gary, and he went to Sunday school with Joseph M. Patterson, who shocked him by his early use of profanity. As a small boy he heard that some horrid anarchists had hurled bombs in Haymarket Square, and the hanging of these men made a deep impression on his child's mind. His family were charitable people, and he developed early a deep sympathy for those in poverty. He was educated at Princeton, where he led a pleasant social life. During the first Administration of Theodore Roosevelt, the age of the Big Stick and the Muckraker, Mr. Poole was inspired by Jacob Riis' "How the Other Half Lives" to take up residence at the University Settlement on the East Side of New York. Here he became a friend of Walter Weyl, William English Walling, Arthur Bullard, Robert Hunter, Howard Brubaker, Lincoln Steffens and many of the other energetic young men who were trying to bring about a better world during the decade before the first World War. He tells us that they thought Frank H. Simonds had a crazy notion when he spent his time studying war maps and kept telling them a big war was coming in Europe before long. Poole wrote reports, magazine articles, stories and publicity on child labor, tuberculosis, the strike in the Chicago stockyards and immigration. He called himself a Socialist.

In 1904 Mr. Poole met Katherine Breshkovsky, the Little Grandmother of the Russian revolution, and other exiles from Czarist oppression. He helped to befriend Maxim Gorky when those who were opposed to Gorky's revolutionary interests hounded him out of the hotels of New York because they discovered that the woman with whom he had been living for many years was only his common law wife. When revolution broke out in Russia in 1905, Ernest Poole persuaded Outlook to send him to Russia to do a series of articles. He visited St. Petersburg, Moscow, the Ukraine and the Caucasus and studied with sympathy the revolutionsts and their aims. Returning to America, Mr. Poole wrote short stories for the magazines and plays which were produced but which were not successful. New York harbor had always had for him a great romantic attraction. He studied it and talked with those who worked on ships and docks and tugs. For him it became "a symbol of this changing world that I had seen with my changing eyes." Using the great harbor as a setting, he fashioned a romantic novel, filled with yearning, which, when it was published in the spring of 1915, became a best seller.

While this novel was going through the press, war in Europe broke out, and Mr. Poole got an assignment to report the German front in France for the Saturday Evening Post. His reflections on the war in central Europe and in France and on Russia in revolution have none of the fresh objectivity or informed fervor which made John Reed, who covered the same events and was one of the greatest reporters the United States ever produced. When America entered the war, Mr. Poole worked with George Creel in the propaganda branch of the service. When revolution broke out again in Russia, he was anxious to see it, and he arranged to do articles about it for the Saturday Evening Post.

Since these activities Mr. Poole has written other novels, one of which, "His Family," received the Pulitzer Prize the first year that prize was awarded, and he has also been a successful magazine writer. But his account of his career in "The Bridge" is marred by a lyric sentimentality not becoming to the hard realism of the sociology and revolution with which he deals. His rather gushing optimism is only qualified by a dim appreciation of dark forces at work in the world.

Air Trek

"WINGS OVER THE AMERICAS," by Alice Rogers Hager. (Macmillan, $2.)

NOT EVERY BOOK can be said to perform a service (even that cardinal one of entertainment), but in "Wings Over the Americas" Alice Rogers Hager more than does her duty. She accomplishes three things. She entertains her readers. She tells travelers of all varieties including the armchair how really easy, pleasant and safe it is to fly to all the Americas. And she adds, her one but not to be ignored voice to those who cry these days for more Federal action in providing really adequate defenses for the Panama Canal.

Mrs. Hager began her long air trek at the Pan American airport, Dinner Key, in Miami, landed for a few moments in Havana, and by the time she had finished lunch over the Gulf of Mexico there was Yucatan! Vera Cruz and Mexico City came next. Panama was followed by the trip down the west coast of South America. From Santiago, Chile, across the Andes to Buenos Aires. To Rio and up the east coast of the continent, to the islands of the Caribbean and back to Miami.

Mrs. Hager has a very special feeling, almost a little boy's awed respect, for sleek wings of shining metal. Clouds and clippers are her bywords, and, being the only woman journalist who writes exclusively on aviation, she is well qualified indeed to present one woman's impression of all the South Americas from the air. Her writing is clear and penetrating; her book is filled with anecdotes and descriptive bits as colorful as the red tiles and green fronds of all hot countries. Of Panama she says, "Grafted onto the native stem that would normally bear an exotic equatorial fruit, grows a clear-skinned, tart, northern apple." Speaking of Rio, she says, "I had a scrap of balcony which looked out over the harbor if you sat at one end, and where at night I could have my table spread and dine between the lights of that lovely shore and the other lights above that were the stars of a more southern sky with the swinging cross of gold, intermingled." Everywhere she went she was regarded a little curiously but always was cordially received.

The author of "Wings Over the Americas" is well acquainted with the early history of commercial flying and her book is a tribute to all the organizers and trail blazers who have made commercial flying, over land and water both, a commonly accepted mode of today's travel. The book is beautifully illustrated with photographs. PENDLETON HOGAN.

Case For Air Power

By Donald C. Bingham

Captain, United States Navy, Retired.

WHEN THE LORD saved humanity the other time He took it to sea on a ship. As further evidence of His understanding of sea power He based the ship on land. The final act in the drama was the utilization of air power (i.e., the dove) for reconnaisance—to find out whether or not it was safe for mankind to return to the land. So it was in the beginning, so it will be in the end, that is say, air power was then and is now a vital part of civilization but only in conjunction with land and sea power.

Maj. Al Williams in his book, "Air Power," overlooked the story of Noah and the Ark but manages to bring in the battle of Cannae, Napoleon's axiom of war that the moral is to the physical in the ratio of three to one, and many other historical references. He ranges over a wide field in his story, covering 416 pages of rather small type. It includes two pages of bibliography and 14 pages, very small type, of indices.

The subjects discussed under the title of "Air Power" are many and varied and often not closely related to chapter titles. For instance, while studying the chapter on the "Background of Air Operations in Spain," I found myself glancing at the top of the page to see what it was all about. But nowhere did I find any reference to that good sea story about the navy junior, who when asked who was Joan of Arc, replied promptly that she was the wife of Noah. In other words, the title of "Air Power" is misleading and should have been "My Experiences, My Ideas, My Dreams—The Sky is the Limit."

In order that I may not be accused of being one of the much-abused officers of the sea, I wish to say that I believe in air power, and that I have even coined a name for it, viz., Airan, which is a telescoping after the modern fashion of "air," "army" and "navy." Airan go brugh, is my motto.

The author of "Air Power" is a well-known protagonist of an air department co-equal with the War and the Navy Departments and he endeavors to make that idea dominant throughout the book. His very enthusiasm for his own ideas leads him into inconsistencies. For instance, he says—"I have always believed a number of 600 or 1,000 pound bombs to be much more effective than a few giant 2,000 pound bombs. Furthermore, a four-engined ship represents too much money wrapped up in one package, to say nothing of the personnel involved. One .30 aircraft shell can destroy, and under certain conditions completely blast a four-engined bomber to smithereens."

MAJ. WILLIAMS

In another part of the book, a paragraph on his ideas about how the dinosaur became extinct, is followed by one in which he says:

"Antiaircraft gunners shooting from the backs of rolling and tossing ships certainly cannot rightfully claim accuracy records when even the shore-based antiaircraft batteries are turning in low scores." These two brief references to the effectivenes of gun power should give Great Britain and her friends hope that all is not lost in the present battle of Britain.

The reader will be pleased to note that "to an American pilot who is accustomed to plainly marked airways with carefully located beams and beacons, Europe offers a mighty baffling problem on a cross-country flight. And the best maps available to me were not quite up to third-rate maps in the United States." Maybe this fact indicates that America understands airpower, even though she is slow to change her age-old organizations for war.

The author does not overlook "black gold" (Roumanian oil), the British "Queen Bess," the Duke of Windsor, currencies, British control of shipping, the death of Gen. Balbo while flying his own plane, etc. His concluding chapters deal with the war in Europe and "America and the Future." Italy's efforts since her entry in the present war do not bear out the contentions made in the chapter on "Italy and Abyssinian Campaign."

As an argument for an independent air department, Maj. Williams' book is not convincing but all will agree that—

"Today, and at this writing, we wait with bated breath while England makes her stand—against an invading air power that existed only in the minds of a few men a few years ago."

"AIR POWER," by Major Al Williams. (Coward, McCann, $3.50.)

Out of the World

"PIANO IN THE BAND," by Dale Curran. (Reynal and Hitchcock, $2.)

THERE'S GOOD WRITING in this book which may facilely be called an offshoot of the sensational "Young Man With a Horn." More important, there's a feeling for the subject which the author has the ability to transfer to his readers. "Piano in the Band," is the story of an orchestra seen through the eyes of its young pianist, George Baker. The leader is Jeff Walters, a brilliant musician (although a second-rate performer) and an extreme egotist, who in 1933, the year of the story, has already passed the peak of his extraordinary popularity but who refuses to recognize that the new music—swing—is beginning to replace the jazz of which he has been a prime exponent.

Dale Curran goes behind the performance to tell his story of the jealousies, bickerings and steady undercurrent of discontent that constitute the Jeff Walters Band. For Walters' best musicians—George on the piano, the vitriolic Jay Crabtree on his inspired trumpet, even the new acquisition, Vivienne Volk, vocalist (and Walters' mistress, although her dope-addict husband is a member of the outfit)—these musicians have the feeling for swing, know it is their stuff and the coming stuff, and fight as best they can to have their own band step forth among the pioneers of the new rhythm.

But it is an undercover, frustrated fight, for Jeff Walters' peculiar genius has been his devilish capacity to mold men into the shape he desires. To George Baker his piano fingers are in a sense Jeff Walters' fingers, and he cannot really fight against this Svengali. Always negative, never entirely sure of himself or of his talents, George is unable to cast off the Walters spell; and he is not alone in this self-abnegation. It requires an art of violence to put an end to a band that lived and made magnificent music as a unit actually despite themselves, only because their leader exerted over them a magnetism bordering on the satanic.

Melodramatic this tale certainly is, but perhaps no more than so than the febrile world-in-itself called jazz. Mr. Curran knows the insides of an orchestra, the problems, the idiom, the almost demoniac frenzy that keeps a jazzman chained to his chair in the band though he may hate every moment of his life. The author has picked a telling period—when the Whitemans and Lewises of jazz were seeing the first threats of suppression by the Goodmans and Dorseys. The framework of his tale is conventional—sex and pathos and murder—but within it the pattern is as multicolored and complex as the world it epitomizes. There is good atmosphere of "the road" (the band is on tour through most of the book). There is a provocative chapter on Baker's first experiences in city life when he plays in a dive owned and frequented by one of Chicago's gangster lords—a strange echo of our prohibition days. There is a particularly good chapter on a jam session sponsored by a Negro band in Chicago to honor the visiting firemen, the Walter outfit.

This is the world of "Hot Jazz," "Jazzmen," "The Kingdom of Swing" and the other documentary accounts of the field that the past few seasons have given us. "Piano in the Band," is this world novelized, but it is no less veracious for that. It's authentic as Americana and as entertainment. E. G.

NEW FACES across dinner and tea tables will add a dash of interest to the coming season as a number of recently appointed officials and their wives come to the fore in the Washington scene.

HOPE MILLER

Arriving soon to take a house will be Mrs. James V. Forrestal, whose husband recently was appointed to the emergency post of Undersecretary of the Navy. A lively and lovely woman, who has a number of friends here already, Mrs. Forrestal is sure to attract much favorable attention.

The Forrestals' New York home on fashionable Beekman Place and their estate at Westbury, L. I., have long been popular gathering centers for celebrities of both the social and artistic world.

An unusually attractive person with a special flair for entertaining, Mrs Forrestal is also an accomplished horsewoman. She and her husband have two sons.

WITH THE AUTUMN and winter cavalcade to the Capital promising to be more brilliant than in many seasons, Washingtonians now flocking back home from beach and mountain resorts are looking forward to an exciting calendar for the next few months.

There's a chance that among the visiting notables will be Maj. Tracy Phillips, one of the most scintillating Britishers ever to set foot in this country. Now a resident of Canada, Maj. Phillips has been invited to Washington by Mr. and Mrs. Lothrop Stoddard, who are summering in West Dennis, Mass., but will return here early next month. Maj. Phillips and Mr. Stoddard are friends of long standing but lost track of each other in recent years. The war, in a way, brought them together again. Mr. Stoddard's latest book, "Into the Darkness," attracted Maj. Phillips' attention and one day recently the two got together to talk over old times.

If any person ever deserved the title "citizen of the world," it is Maj. Phillips whose career had carried him to out-of-the-way places all over the globe. He spent some time in central Russia and Asia Minor and at one time was charged with the administration of the mountain district in Belgian East Africa.

While there he became interested in the workings of a number of secret organizations—especially the notorious "Mya Binga" and the "Human Leopards," which terrorized half of Africa. His life is partially portrayed in a thrilling novel, "The Man Who Knew," by F. A. M. Webster; but I understand that the stories Maj. Phillips tells himself are more fascinating than anything that has been written about him.

RESORT SKETCHBOOK: Washington colonists seem to be holding a sizable slice of the spotlight up and down the Atlantic Seaboard. Leaders in the social whirl at York Harbor, Me., are Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Legare, who have with them for the summer her grandson, George Pulver. Mr. Legare is a member of the colony's distinguished board of governors . . . On Friday, bigwigs turned out by the dozens to hear Walter Lippmann's lecture, given as a charity benefit . . . Mrs. George Angus Garrett, Miss Bell Gurnee, Mrs. Frank Noyes, Mrs. Marshall Langhorne and Mrs. Stanley (Mary Roberts) Rinehart were among patronesses for the "At the Circus" ball given the past week for the Mt. Desert Island Hospital fund . . .

Mrs. Barron Du Bois and her daughter, Catherine, have been doing their bit for charity at Marblehead, where they are spending the summer . . . At a recent benefit fete, Catherine had charge of the gift table . . . Up at Saratoga a number of Washington colonists are taking an interest in plans for the gala charity party of the season—the American Carnival for Britain, set for August 25 . . . The shindig will take place at Grand Union, the oldest hotel in the resort, and money raised will go to the American Theater Fund for British Ambulances . . . Such stellar Saratoga notables as John Hay Whitney, Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt, Mrs. Chauncey Olcott and Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Sanford are on the patrons' committee.

One of Saratoga's biggest days to date was chalked off the calendar yesterday with the running of the North American Steeplechase, the Spinaway, and the Travers . . . Oh, yes, and there was Mrs. Payne Whitney's famous birthday party for her son "Jock" to add a special dash of interest to the after-races whirl.

Top Hats and Tiaras

By Betty Beale

SINCE summer vacationers are barred from lands beyond the seas, Americans are seeing America first in a big way.

BETTY BEALE

The coast of New England is still holding its own for those who want cooler climates. The Oliver Iselins have left their home in Middleburg, Va., to spend the month at Northeast Harbor, Me. . . . York Harbor, 200 miles down the coast, is a veritable home-town colony. Mrs. Gale McLean and her young son, Locke, are spending the summer with Mary's mother and father, Gen. and Mrs. M. E. Locke. Also with them are Patsy Gibson and her small blond daughter, Linda. At the head of a large household this summer are Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Byrd from Winchester, Va. Maggie Byrd had visiting her for a week Eleanor Flood who then set off for Newport, R. I.

AND NOW A BIT of joyful news for Washingtonians. Mme. Georges Thenault, whose husband was formerly air attache at the French Embassy, has arrived at York Harbor from France with her mother and two children. Sarah, who is recuperating from a fatiguing journey across the ocean, plans to spend the winter in Washington, and hopes to have Georges join her very soon . . . A few miles farther south on Nantucket Island, more familiar faces may be seen. Bessie Kerkam and Lib and Sam Scrivner are among those spending the summer "on Island." Dick Bonivale and Ronald Allen are also vacationing there . . . on Cape Cod are Betty and Marion Shouse, who are enjoying the healthy climes of Centerville.

Sara Hastie, whom many know from her visit with Betty Drayton in Washington, is at York Harbor with her mother. She plans to be there the rest of the month with the exception of a jaunt or two to Narragansett and the Cape . . . Kate Scully is there also visiting Mrs. Chandler Anderson as the guest of Mrs. Anderson's daughter, Mrs. Daniel Long . . . and Bill Gray, who is on vacation from New York, staying with his mother, Mrs. William Gray . . . at the same place is Mrs. James Johnston with her two daughters, Mrs. Randolph Mason and Mrs. Lacy Hall.

AT MARBLEHEAD NECK this summer is Elizabeth Breckinridge Graham with her husband and two children. Elizabeth, it will be remembered, was graduated from the Holton-Arms School, and later taught at the Maderia School. She is now living in Winston-Salem.

So much for the Eastern coast, and now we learn from one who is seeing America first the Western way . . . It seems that the "Seven Keys to Baldpate" was no fable, for all seven keys hang from the signpost of the original Baldpate Inn in Este Park. But this isn't all—Baldpate boasts the most famous key collection in the world, having between 8,000 and 9,000 keys of all varieties from places the world over. Among them is the key to Mozart's cellar, as well as the key to the Wilanow Palace outside Warsaw, and this one, incidentally has Count Potocki's crest on it . . . And Clarence Darrow, Richard Dix and Jack Benny have also left there, the "open sesames" to their respective homes, studios, etc.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Kleberg, of Kingsville, Tex., pause for a bit of shade at Saratoga. They will visit his brother, Representative Richard Kleberg, in Washington, before returning to their home.

Miss White To Make Bow At St. Regis

Of wide interest in Washington is the announcement that Miss Margaret R. White will be presented to society on December 27 at a supper dance on the St. Regis Roof, in New York.

She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Campbell White, who are now in Calcutta, India, where Mr. White is American Consul General.

Miss White is spending the summer with her grandmother, Mrs. R. Burnham Moffat, of 660 Park avenue and Little Thoresby, Bernardsville, N. J.

Miss Willey Marries J. L. Doggett

Couple Will Make Their Home in Arlington After Maine Honeymoon

Miss Catherine Louise Willey, daughter of Mrs. James Bernard McDevitt, became the bride of James Leonard Doggett, son of Mr. and Mrs. David C. Doggett, at the Lewis Memorial Methodist Church yesterday afternoon. The Rev. John A. Trader officiated.

Palms and white gladioli adorned the church. Miss Lillian Wines, organist, with Miss Arelia Birmingham, soloist, furnished the music.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her brother, James A. Willey, wore a white French organdie frock fashioned on princess lines with a sweetheart neckline and a circular train. Her fingertip illusion veil was held by a cluster of orange blossoms. She wore a string of pearls—a gift of the bridegroom—and carried a bouquet of white gladioli and orchids.

Miss Jane Ingle Vrooman, who was maid of honor for her cousin, wore a costume of white French organdie with canary-yellow embroidered dots. She carried shasta daisies tied with yellow ribbon. The other two attendants, Mrs. Edward Ferneyhough and Mrs. Vincent Hearing, also wore white French organdie frocks embroidered with pale green dots. They carried black-eyed Susans tied with yellow and green ribbons.

Vernon Van Landingham was best man. Ushers were Lester Eyler and William Wright. Immediately following there was a reception in the Dodge Hotel tea room and garden. The bride's mother wore a gown of powder blue chiffon and lace, with a white picture hat. Her corsage was of sweetheart roses. The bridegroom's mother wore a dusty pink gown with white accessories and a corsage of gardenias.

When the couple left on their wedding trip to Maine the bride wore a dark green linen suit and a corsage of orchids. They will be at home after September 10 in Arlington, Va.

Edith Bartlett To Become Bride Of R. M. McClellan

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Edwin Bartlett, of Germantown, Philadelphia, have issued invitations for the marriage of their daughter, Miss Edith Russell Bartlett, to Richard Marshall McClellan, on Saturday, August 31, at 5 p. m., in the Unitarian Church of Germantown.

Miss Bartlett was graduated from Smith College and from the Tyler Academy of Art, Philadelphia.

Mr. McClellan has made his home in Alexandria for the past year since being graduated in 1939 from Amherst College. He attended Sidwell's Friends School in Washington when his father, Col. Edwin North McClellan, United States Marine Corps, was stationed in Washington.

TO MAKE DEBUT IN WARRENTON

MISS Virginia Stuart Watkins, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Bell Watkins, of Annefield, Clarke County, in whose honor invitations have been issued to a dance to be given at the North Wales Club in Warrenton. The event, to take place on Saturday evening, September 7, will be given by her parents and Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Watkins, jr., of Winchester.

Miss Watkins is the granddaughter of the late Bishop Mackay Smith and Mrs. Smith, of Philadelphia. The Rev. Dr. Smith, before he was elected Bishop of Pennsylvania, was for some years rector of St. John's Episcopal Church in Washington.

MISS VIRGINIA STUART WATKINS

By Nina Carter Tabb

ONE OF THE GAYEST parties of the summer was the camping fete given recently by Mr. and Mrs. H. Gwynne Tayloe, jr., of Front Royal, and Miss Juliet Dulaney, of Washington. White Horse Rock on the Shenandoah River was the locale of the event, the party staying at the cottage owned by Mrs. H. Rozier Dulany on Bule Ball Mountain just above the famous spring.

Fishing, swimming and boating was on the daily calendar for the 15 campers, who spent their evenings singing around camp fires. Miss Barbara Bradley, Miss Sally Bradley and Miss Edar Fleming, of Washington, were among the guests.

Others were Miss Mary Owen Lyon, Miss Fanny Nelson Lyson, Harvard White, Richard Tayloe, Mack Tabb, Robert Turner, Robert Sharp, Moncure Lyon, jr., and Bob Lyon. Numerous friends visited camp while the party was going on—among them Capt. Cantwell Brown, Lieut. John Curley and Lieut. Mack Raffo, of Richmond, who were in Aldie with the National Guard; Mr. and Mrs. H. G. Tayloe, sr., Mrs. Julian Rozel, Mr. and Mrs. Julian Rozel, jr., Mrs. Mary L. Jamison, Mr. and Mrs. William Griffeth, Miss Helen Powers, Miss Elizabeth Tennant, Billy Hulbert, jr., and Malbon (Drift) Wood.

ARCHIE CARY RANDOLPH, jr., of Upperville, who is instructing a class of 15 students for the Civil Aeronautics Authority at Martinsburg, W. Va., is getting along famously with his men, eight of whom have soloed. Mr. Randolph is in the air eight hours a day, teaching, and his pupils have to make 35 hours flying time each, before they can get a license.

After Archie Cary Randolph has finished with his class, he will assume duties as pilot for the Eastern Airlines between Washington and New York. He has had much of flying experience and is considered one of the best young pilots in the country.

Edward Shirley Turner, of Middleburg, who was graduated head of his class in flying last winter in Anacostia, Md., has been riding the skyways frequently with Mr. Randolph and recently obtained his commercial pilot's license. At present he is considering taking a job as co-pilot with a well known airline.

Andrew Young and Bryson Wood, of Baltimore, are guests of Mrs. A. C. Marshall. Later, they will go to Cape May, N. J., to spend a few days.

Mrs. Hanson Ely and Mrs. Hunter de Butts entertained a number of friends at afternoon tea on Wednesday at their home, Nordley, Upperville.

Old Point Comfort Attracts Many Washingtonians

With the season at Old Point Comfort, Va., reaching a climax, an increasing number of Washingtonians have gathered at the resort.

Maj. and Mrs. Robert Hendon and Maj. and Mrs. Lyman E. Morris are stopping at the Chamberlin, and other sojourners there from Washington include Mr. and Mrs. James Mangum, Mr. and Mrs. C. B. Lister, Mr. and Mrs. L. M. Trueworthy and the Misses Frances Johnson and Elizabeth Presson.

Angelica Fales Will Marry Justice's Son

District Girl Sets Nuptials in New York For September 7

New York, Aug. 17.—A number of important weddings have been planned for early September and will usher in the post-Labor Day spurt in social activities.

Miss Angelica and Van Rensselaer Fales, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Haliburton Fales, of this city and Nassau, Bahamas, will be married September 7 to Lawrence Boardman Dunham, jr., son of Justice Dunham, of the Domestic Relations Court, and Mrs. Dunham, of Riverdale, N. Y. The ceremony will take place in St. James Protestant Episcopal Church here, and a small reception will follow at the Fales home, 116 East Seventy-second street.

Mrs. Cruger G. Fowler (Elizabeth Fales), will be matron of honor. Other attendants will include another sister, Mrs. David Arms (Ellen D. Fales); a sister-in-law, Mrs. Samuel Fales, of Cocoanut Grove, Fla.; Mrs. Dunham's sister, Miss Margaret Van Vryling Dunham; Mrs. Edward Lyon Kent, jr., Mrs. Robert De Witt Clinton Meeker and Miss Rachel Meade Parker, of New York.

William Putnam Dunham will be best man for his brother. Ushers will be Francis Cowles Cady, Farmington, Conn.; James Howard Dempsey, jr., Cleveland; James D. Ewing, Fieldton, N. Y.; Joseph Richardson Dilworth and Joseph B. Stevens, New York; William Sturgis Brewster, New York; Amos E. Schermerhorn, San Francisco; Joseph Carrere Fox, Spuyten Duyvil, New York; Edward McGuire Gordon, Savannah, and Francis S. Whitman, Stevenson, Md.

Grace Perkins, Richard Piper, Jr., To Be Married

Mrs. Randolph Perkins, of Ridgewood, N. J., formerly of Woodcliff Lake, N. J., announces the engagement of her daughter, Miss Grace Perkins to Richard Clay Piper, jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Clay Piper, also of Ridgewood.

Miss Perkins was graduated from the Ridgewood High School and attended the Holton-Arms School of this city and the New Jersey College for Women. The bride-elect is the daughter of the late Representative Randolph Perkins, who represented the Sixth and Seventh Congressional Districts of New Jersey for many years.

Mr. Piper was graduated from the Ridgewood High School and from Duke University in 1936, and the Harvard Business School in 1938. He is now associated with the firm of R. H. Macy & Co. in New York. The wedding will take place in the early fall.

Miss Eleanor Cranford Married to Clyde Bolig

MRS. CLYDE DAVID BOLIG

Hessler Studio.

IN A SETTING of palms and baskets of white flowers against a background of oak foliage Miss Eleanor Ruth Cranford, daughter of Mrs. Ruth Murray Cranford and the late Edward Beamer Cranford, of Washington, was married yesterday afternoon at 4 o'clock to Clyde David Bolig, son of Mrs. Dora Y. Bolig, of Northumberland, Pa.

The ceremony took place at the Mount Vernon Place Methodist Episcopal Church, the Rev. William Wallace McIntyre, of Winchester, Va., officiating. The bride was given in marriage by her cousin, Thomas Athey Murray, of Newport News, Va. Her gown of silk faille was made with a yoke of sheer net, basque waist and billowing skirt. Her long veil of illusion was held in place by an Elizabethan cap and she carried a white Testament which belonged to her father and to which was fastened a white orchid and lilies of the valley.

HER MATRON OF HONOR, Mrs. Harold C. Black, chose hacienda green chiffon with a matching Juliet cap with a tassel to the hips. The bride's other attendants, Mrs. Richard S. Hunter and Mrs. A. Winston Shell, were similarly dressed in shades of golden sun and burnt rust, and their caps were like that of the matron of honor. All carried brown orchids with a shower of ribbons.

Mark Y. Bolig was best man for his brother and the ushers included L. V. Berry and Harold C. Black, of Pittsburgh, and Richard M. Wilson and Richard S. Hunter, of Washington and Virginia.

FOLLOWING THE ceremony a reception for close relatives was held at the Broadmoor. Mrs. Cranford wore ashes of roses net with lace inserts and a bolero jacket and Dubonnet hat. Mrs. Bolig, mother of the bridegroom, was gowned in periwinkle blue made of Chantilly lace with gores of silk marquisette. A leghorn hat completed her costume.

After a wedding trip to New York and Ocean City, N. J., the couple will live in Pittsburgh. As her going away costume the bride chose a dark green suit trimmed in sable with a matching turban and a corsage of orchids.

MRS. BOLIG is a graduate of Wilson Teachers College and has taught in the public schools here. The bridegroom is an alumnus of Pennsylvania State College and belongs to Phi Kappa Psi Fraternity.

Among the out-of-town guests were Miss Martha E. Bolig, sister of Mr. Bolig, and Mrs. Mark Y. Bolig, both of Northumberland, Pa.; Albert Hess, of New York; Mrs. L. V. Berry, of Pittsburgh; Mrs. Mae Murray and Miss Anne Murray, of Hampton, Va.; Mrs. Thomas A. Murray and Miss Nancy Mae Murray, of Newport News, Va.; John Hough, Mrs. Charles Duffey and Miss Cora Duffey, of Alexandria, Va.; Mr. and Mrs. Julian Davis, of Alexandria; Mrs. Lillian E. Stephens, of Lake Worth, Fla.; the Misses Hammerly, Miss Ida Beuchler and Mrs. Edward C. Dishman, of Leesburg; Mrs. W. W. McIntyre, of Winchester, and Mr. and Mrs. Hammond Cranford, of Lorton, Va.

Dr. Guilherme Guinle, Brazilian Capitalist, Visiting Here

DIPLOMATIC CIRCLING

By Carolyn Bell

THAT DAPPER GENTLEMAN, constantly sporting a wing collar, whom you may have noticed around the Shoreham lately is none other than Brazil's most talked of capitalist—Dr. Guilherme Guinle.

Carolyn Bell

A slender man with gray hair, Dr. Guinle is in this country to study the steel industry in the hopes of starting one in Brazil. One of the richest men in Brazil, he is a philanthropist of note. He has endowed many institutes, possibly the most famous of which is the Gaffre-Guinle Medical Institute which deals with research as well as clinical work.

IF AND WHEN the Belgian army is demobilized young Charles van der Straten-Ponthoz, son of the Ambassador of Belgium, and Countess van der Straten-Ponthoz, will probably rejoin his parents in Washington. The youthful count, who left several years ago to do the expected military service in his country, saw active duty in the motorized calvary unit and was wounded in one leg.

The chic countess, who has been sticking close to Washington this summer, spent several days in Long Island this week. Their daughter, Betty van der Straten-Ponthoz, is continuing with her musical studies.

IT'S A LONG WAY off until Christmas (or is it?) but the Trucco clan is looking forward to the holiday. At least most of the family of the former Chilean Ambassador here, Manuel Trucco, will have a reunion in their homeland. The only one missed will be pert Mrs. Robert Knowlton, of this city, who is pretty sad about the whole affair.

Senora Fernandez Illanes, the former Chela Trucco, is expected to go to Chile this winter to join her father, sister, Marta, and brother Manuel, jr. Chela's husband, who was formerly stationed in Washington is now First Secretary of the Chilean Embassy in Peru. Young Manuel, who is busily engaged in the mining business in Chile, still has a yen for the United States of America it seems and hopes to get back here soon.

THE AGE-OLD FEMALE curiosity is the same the world over. During the Havana conference the "Senoras of the Press" interviewed Mrs. Cordell Hull with as much relish as any American femme ever did. Her activities, dress, and ideas on foreign affairs were described in great detail.

WORD FROM BRAZIL has it that young Zazi Aranha, who charmed all who met her when her father was Ambassador here, has acquired a sporty coupe which she drives expertly over Rio. I expected to hear that the daring Zazi had taken to the sky but not so as yet.

Zazi Aranha

Dedel, the other daughter of the Minister of Foreign Affaires, and Serhara Aranha, who was but a stripling when her parents lived here, has grown into a lovely lady, I am told. She is tall and resembles her handsome father.

William Sprung to Wed Miss Hilda Levin

Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Levin, of Washington, announce the engagement of their daughter, Miss Hilda Levin, to William Sprung, of New York. The wedding will take place September 15 at the Levin home, and afterward the couple will live on Long Island.

Miss Levin made her home here until recently, when she went to New York to work.

Business Women to Meet at Bristol, Va.

Approximately 25 members of the local chapter of Federation of Business and Professional Women's Club will attend the Southeastern regional meeting of organization in Bristol, Va., August 30 through September 2.

Florence A. Armstrong, president, will head the delegation and lead a round-table discussion on the merit system. Mrs. Ellen Wooward and Judge Lucy Howerth will be among the speakers.

Two past national presidents who are members of the District group will attend. They are Earline White and Charl Ormond Williams. Others already signed for the trip include: Mae Murray, Nelle Ingels, E. M. Kass, Katherine O'Deonnel, Nannie Saunders, Marie Saunders, Bernice Potter, Emily Clark, Rorsalie Moynaham, Esther Colvin, Helen Baker and Sue White.

To Be Married At St. John's In September

The engagement of Miss Mary Catherine Holmes, to Dr. Dana Coman, of New York, is announced by her mother, Mrs. Mary Early Holmes, of 2338 Massachusetts avenue. The bride-elect is a daughter of the late George R. Holmes, who was chief of the Washington bureau, International News Service, for 18 years and was president of the Gridiron Club in 1938. She is a niece of Stephen T. Early, secretary to the President.

Miss Holmes was graduated from the Friends School and Western High School here and she completed one year at the University of Wisconsin, her father's alma mater, last June.

Dr. Coman, son of the late Rev. Dr. Frederick M. Coman and Evelyn Dana Coman, is a graduate of Harvard and Johns Hopkins universities and formerly was a physician on the Labrador coast with Sir Wilfred T. Grenfell. He also was a member of the Byrd and Ellsworth Antarctic expeditions and is now conducting nutritional research.

The marriage will take place at St. John's Church, the latter part of September.

Mrs. Holmes and her daughter are now in White Sulphur, where they will spend several weeks with the Old White Art Colony.

President's Visit Highlights Season at Jamestown, R. I.

HIGH SPOT of the season for the summer colony at Jamestown, R. I., was the recent visit of President Roosevelt. He was greeted by members of the Conanicut Yacht Club on Monday morning while the President's yacht was tied up at the yacht club dock. He made an inspection trip of the Naval Training Station as well as the naval torpedo factory at Newport.

The retired admirals who are spending the summer here held their annual tea last Saturday for the seventeenth successive year. This year, Mrs. John Wadleigh and her sister, Miss Angeleca Remey, daughters of the late Rear Admiral George C. Remey, acted as hostesses in place of the late Rear Admiral Spencer Wood, the host of former years.

ABOUT THE TOWN

—BY DUDLEY HARMON

MRS EDWARD BEALE McLEAN will do practically anything for her friends but accept their invitations to dinner. Instead, she prefers to see people at Friendship, and on the rare occasion when she sallies forth in the evening, it's usually to a night club, where she likes to sit and watch the people.

Fortunately for her friends trapped in Washington during the summer, Mrs. McLean has been entertaining informally at dinners off and on during the heat and humidity. Aside from the excellent quality of her famous food and service, the warmth of Mrs. McLean's greetings to every guest is the real secret of her reputation as a hostess. In spite of flunkies, the atmosphere at Friendship remains informal because you feel that Mrs. McLean really is enjoying herself and wants you to do likewise.

THE OTHER EVENING found an interesting group of politicians, diplomats and newspaper people gathered around four large tables at Friendship for dinner. Afterward everybody adjourned to the sunporch—turned over to Red Cross bandage rollers during the daytime—to watch a new movie.

Seen here and there: Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, who with the exception of flying weekends to Beverly, Mass., is in his office early every summer morning at 9. (The Senator promised at the beginning of his campaign to see everybody who wanted to see him, and has stuck to his "open door" policy) . . . Argentine Ambassador Espil at the right of the hostess. . . . Senators Guffey, Capper and King making courtly bows . . . Dr. Eugene de Savitsch, whose autobiography is currently a best seller . . . Banker Robert Fleming doling out cigarettes to several excited young ladies whose nerves needed calming during the course of the very dramatic movie . . . Mrs. Lionel Atwill dashing in a little late, but with the perfect excuse of a house in the country . . . Fred Essary proudly introducing his young daughter, Helene . . . Frank Waldrop and Mrs. Fulton Lewis with their heads together . . . Mme. Procope in a pretty green print . . . Rebecca Wellington, who left yesterday to vacation with Mrs. Lodge at Beverly . . . the Misses Randolph . . . Miss Elizabeth Poe and her sister, Mrs. Vylla Poe Wilson, old friends of Mrs. McLean . . . George T. Summerlin, saying he felt wonderful after a month's vacation on the West Coast . . . and Gen. Sherman Miles, head of Military Intelligence.

FRAMED AND HUNG on the wall in the ladies' cloakroom we noticed a tragic souvenir—the check for $100,000 which Mrs. McLean gave to Gaston Means to get back the kidnaped Lindbergh baby.

LESLIE FORD, the successful murder-mystery writer, takes little interest in newspaper accounts of real life murders. She thinks they're too definitely unpleasant and would rather fabricate her own, in which there's always a dash of humour. In private life Mrs. Ford K. Brown, wife of the St. John's College professor, the author has been coming to Washington off and on this summer for brief stays. Young, slender, with an inquiring mind, Miss Ford is one of 11 children of an Anglican clergyman. All were given Biblical names. Miss Ford started writing when her husband was on a fellowship at Oxford and "we needed money."

FLASH! Rumor around town has it that the retiring French Ambassador to Washingon, Count de Saint Quentin, will be named to a Latin American post and will therefore not return to his homeland after his successor arrives here.

Mrs. Louise de Arango Palmer Close Is Wed to Erik John Henry Eriksen

OF WIDE INTEREST in Washington was the wedding in New York Friday when Mrs. Louise de Arango Palmer Close and Erik John Henry Eriksen exchanged vows.

St. James Protestant Episcopal Church was the scene of the ceremony. No announcement of the couple's engagement nor of plans for their marriage had been made.

The bride is a granddaughter of the late Marquis de Arango de Seville, while Mr. Eriksen formerly was First Consul from Denmark to Johannesburg. He became an American citizen five years ago and is now in business in New York. His brother is Capt. Svend Eriksen, former Danish army head in Copenhagen.

IN THE PRESENCE of members of the families and a few close friends, the Rev. Dr. Rudolph Roell performed the ceremony. A small reception followed at the St. Regis, and later the couple left for Lawrence, Long Island, where they will spend the remainder of the summer. They will make their home in New York.

Mrs. Eriksen's former husband, who died three years ago, was a retired woolen merchant. He was connected with the War Department's intelligence division in the World War.

Walter H. Close, jr., and David Palmer Close are sons of the bride, and her daughter is Miss Suzanne Close, who was introduced to society two years ago.

The bride is an authority on art, the study of which she furthered during her stay in Italy where she studied in Florence for some time. Earlier, she attended a convent school in England, where her paternal grandfather, Sir Thomas Bramwell Palmer lived.

Mr. Eriksen is a son of Mr. and Mrs. Erik Eriksen, of Alborz, Denmark. He studied in Copenhagen and at Oxford University.

Mary Haworth's Mail

After Circling Globe, Man Settles Here, Falls in Love, Spends Money Riotously, Loses Job, Alienates His Sweetheart and Now Asks How to Redeem Himself

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am a man 31 years old. I have been in Washington about four years. After leaving high school, I traveled around the world and worked for a time in three foreign countries. I have always been anxious to improve my education, but until I settled in Washington, I didn't stay in one place long enough to return to school. Last year I managed some schooling for awhile, but had to give it up because overwork had my nerves in bad shape.

My problem concerns a girl (as usual). I met her last year and went with her for 10 months, without missing a day. Then she went away on vacation, from which she has just returned. Now she says that while she still loves me, she doesn't want to see me oftener than twice a week. After 10 months' steady company, and having dinner with me every night, now she doesn't want me even to eat dinner at the same boarding house where she eats. However, she doesn't object if I telephone her every day.

When I first met her, I was very much in debt. Not being used to charge accounts, I went to extremes and abused my credit, which wasn't necessary as I made a very good salary. When finally I came to my senses, I had lost my job. I was much embarassed and in trying to conceal the facts from the girl I made things worse for myself. I lied to her time after time; and apologized later for each lie, until my attitude toward her became one continuous apology.

TRIES TO HIDE FOLLY BY LYING TO HIS GIRL

I am sincerely sorry for my past bad behavior and intend to do all in my power to profit by my mistakes and improve myself in every way. Do you think there is any chance of my winning the girl back? She says she just doesn't think I have it in me to do right. I know I made many mistakes, but I think some allowance could be made in view of the fact that I had a big problem on my hands, trying to adjust myself to staying in one place. I would very much appreciate your opinion. J. W. H.

DEAR J. W. H.: Right now, you do have some chance of winning the girl back. And I think I can tell you just how good that chance is. It is just as good as—and no better than—your ability to start demonstrating, immediately and indisputably, that you are a permanently changed man, who can be depended upon (1) to get and hold a job, (2) pay as he goes, (3) keep his word, (4) honor the truth, (5) improve his education up to the level of his needs or aspirations or opportunities (or all three).

HAS LONG-SHOT CHANCE TO REDEEM SELF

(6) Make daily progress in the matter of establishing mastery over the normal man's self-assignment of pulling his own weight economically, while building toward the day when he can support the average number of dependents and at the same time carry a fair share of responsibility for the community weal; (7) adjust himself cheerfully, as an exercise in character growth, to the social disciplines of "settling" in one place, and (8) actually thrive, in mind, body, spirit and affairs, on this mountain-climbing program.

So now, you tell me how good your chances are of winning the girl's confidence all over again. I say she has given you a sporting chance—because in admitting that she still loves you, despite your bad behavior, and in agreeing to see you twice a week, she has placed you on a kind of probation, even though she has failed to define the arrangement as such.

ON PROBATION WITHOUT REALIZING IT

She is, apparently, a girl of considerable spunk and laudable integrity, and in throwing you out on your ear, in a manner of speaking, she has faced you with exactly the challenge you needed to start yourself thinking and acting constructively. More than that she should not be expected to do for you. She would be a bigger fool than she seems to be, if she seconded your whimpering notion that you are deserving of "allowances," because you had thought (out of some small-time soldier-of-fortune experience) that you could get away with being a wastrel, braggart, work-shirker and liar.

You say you have learned your lesson. The best I can say is—"I hope so." But just how much of a lesson you have learned, and how well, remains to be proved. "If," as Mr. Kipling said, "you can trust yourself when all men doubt you but make allowance for their doubting too; if you can wait and not be tired by waiting, etc., etc.," and if you can turn in, day after day, without guarantee of reward, the upright performance that self-respecting citizens pursue as a matter of course, then I predict that eventually you will regain all that you have lost and enter into possession of much more besides. M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

Cranberry Pie for Summer Menu

First bake a 9-inch pie shell. Then place 1 cup cranberry sauce, 1-3 cup sugar and 4 egg yolks in top of double boiler and beat until mixed. Heat, stirring constantly until custardy, about 8 minutes. Add 1 tablespoon gelatin that has been softened in ¼ cup cold water. Add ½ teaspoon salt and 1 tablespoon lemon juice. Cool until the mixture begins to congeal. Beat 4 egg whites stiff and gradually add 1-3 cup of sugar, beating until sugar has been thoroughly dissolved and mixture becomes a stiff meringue. Fold into cranberry mixture. Fill baked pie shell and chill until firm. Whip ½ cup whipping cream, sweeten slightly with sugar and flavor with few drops of vanilla. Spread over pie just before serving.

W. H. Gilliam to Wed Susan Imogene Carr

Mr. and Mrs. Glenworth C. Carr announce the engagement of their daughter, Susan Imogene, to William Hanks Gilliam. The wedding will take place August 21 at the Petworth Methodist Church.

Miss Helen Steele, G. R. Jones Married

Summer flowers adorned the Transfiguration Episcopal Church yesterday at noon for the marriage of Miss Helen Gertrude Steele and George Raymond Jones. The bride is the daughter of Mrs. Effie Steele. Mr. Jones is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Jones, of Arlington, Va. The Rev. William H. Heigham officiated. Jesse Heitmuller played the organ throughout the ceremony.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her brother, wore a light blue jacket dress and a matching hat. Her corsage was of white orchids.

Mrs. Charles A. Willmuth served as matron of honor. She wore a pale pink redingote suit and a corsage of pale orchids. Mr. Willmuth was best man.

When the couple return from their wedding trip they will live at 4230 Second road north, Arlington, Va. The bride was the registrar at the Washington College of Law and a member of Phi Sigma Epsilon Sorority. Mr. Jones was graduated from the University of Virginia and Washington College of Law. He is a member of the bar of Virginia and the District of Columbia, and of Delta Upsilon and Sigma Nu Phi fraternities.

Summer Bachelors

THE DOMESTICATE:

"Don't you think Washington nights are especially lovely, Mr. Cleever?"

"We-l-l yes. Of course with the wife and family gone—"

"Oh-h! So you're alone this summer!"

"Oh no—yes—well, that is the family's just at the beach. I run down to see 'em every week or two."

"I suppose you're playing a great deal of golf?"

"Well no. In fact I've been working around the yard in my spare time. My wife wanted some things done—"

"I see. By the way, what do you think about England, Mr. Cleever?"

"Well, it's just as I was telling my wife last Sunday—there are a lot of factors to be considered."

"How very true! Well, what do you think about conscription?"

"Well, of course, having a wife and four children I wouldn't be affected personally—"

"Oh, no, of course! By the way, did you see 'The Ramparts We Watch?' "

"No. To tell the truth I haven't been to a picture show since my wife left."

"Have you been to any of the Watergate Concerts?"

"Yes. My wife's mother was in town one week-end and—"

"Oh say! I wonder if that could be some titled war refugee! That exotic looking woman over there in that lace hood?"

"Which one do you mean? It's just as my wife says, I don't know a thing about women's clothes."

"Really! Well tell me one thing, Mr. Cleever—what is the first thing you notice about a woman?"

"What a funny question! You sound just like my wife!"

THE MAN ABOUT TOWN:

"How are you standing the heat, Mr. Wilder?"

"Well, to tell the truth I haven't noticed it much. Of course, there's so much air conditioning—all the restaurants hotels, night clubs . . . "

"Have you spent many summers in Washington?"

"Oh—a few. They're not bad here. Now, of course, if you've ever been in the tropics—"

"Oh, have you been in the tropics?"

"Well—in a way—yes. What I was going to say was the Washington nights remind me of the tropics—that is, psychologically speaking."

"You think so?"

"Yes, there's that languorous, let go quality about them. A sort of drift with the tide feeling . . . You know—as if nothing mattered."

"Oh-h, yes. I suppose you've been doing some star gazing?"

"A little. Why not? . . . At a time like this . . . when no one knows what's going to happen tomorrow . . . "

"Oh ye-es, of course. I suppose we do only live once."

"That's the idea exactly! And right now with things the way they are . . . "

"That's an interesting philosophy, Mr. Wilder."

"It's true. Say, have you heard the Rhythm Boys out at Trombone Gardens?"

"No I haven't."

"Wouldn't you like to go out there for dinner some evening."

"I'd love it!"

"All right. Now I'll be out of town this week-end, but the first of next week——"

"I'll be away all next week. What about the next?"

"All right—no wait! That'll be after the first won't it? And I'm going to be a little uncertain about my time after the first. Besides I never in believe in putting anything off. What about tomorrow night?"

THE CUT-UP!

"What a stunning hatband, Mr. Squibb!"

"You think so! Well, you see, my wife's out of town—"

"No!"

"Yes, and I just told her when she left I was going to step out and show all my girls a good time."

"Really!"

"Yes, you know there's a lot of life in the old boy yet. Say! I'm going to take you jitterbugging some night and prove it!"

"How nice!"

"Yes, we've got to get together and step out some. You know the whole trouble with both of us is we've been too suppressed."

"You think so?"

"Yes. Now while my wife's away you and I are going out and make whoopee all over town."

"How grand!"

"Yes, I've had my eye on you for a long time. You know I believe you and I understand each other."

"Oh, Mr. Squibb! I never dreamed you felt that way about me!"

"I don't—that is I mean I do. What I mean is you and I are going to have a lot of fun together."

"Well, I've always thought there was something between us Mr. Squibb. That is something sort of intangible."

"Ye-es—well that is—I tell you, I'll call you up sometime."

"Oh, we might as well plan now. Say, there's a wonderful orchestra out at the Hotel Swank. We could have dinner and—"

"Well we'll get together sometime and talk it over."

"Why don't we just say tomorrownight? You know there are so many things I want to talk to you about Mr. Squibb—"

"Well-er the whole thing is I'm going to be busy tomorrow night . . . and then I've got to go out of town for a spell. But say, I'll call you—just as soon as I get back."

Mrs. Wiley Tells of Tour In Americas

Traveler, Impressed By Latin Culture, Talks at A.A.U.W. Tea

MRS. HARVEY W. WILEY, who returned recently from the good will tour of South America sponsored by the Federation of Women's Clubs and the Association of University Women, gave a talk on her experiences at a tea held on Monday afternoon at the University Women's Association clubhouse.

The speaker told how the delegation was greeted everywhere by the local mayors, representatives of the diplomatic service, heads of schools and colleges and groups from women's clubs and civic organizations. She was particularly impressed by the South American art schools.

In Lima, Peru, reported Mrs. Wiley, the National School of Fine Arts teaches sculpture, painting, tile making, arts and crafts. In Montevideo and Buenos Aires, there are also fine national schools. Mrs. Wiley reported that in Buenos Aires the school children sang the Star-Spangled Banner as well as their own national anthem when the Americans arrived. The school children everywhere shouted "Viva Estados Unidos."

MRS. WILEY summarized her trip as follows:

There is a need for continental solidarity, mutual agreement in the field of economic relations, namely economic planning for the Americas.

There is a need for cultural understanding, knowledge and appreciation of the richness of the cultures and traditions of the other Americas, and recognition of the advanced character of their public welfare, social legislation and education.

There is a need to develop projects which will carry through the other America a better knowledge of us, of our culture and home life especially.

Mrs. Wiley also emphasized the necessity for Americans to learn Spanish.

THE PROGRAM for the tea was arranged by Mrs. Lalla Cornish and Mrs. Frank S. Smith introduced the speaker. Among the guests were Senora de Lewis, Senora de Farman, Mrs. Thomas Burke, Miss Mabel Vernon, Mrs. Randolph D. Hopkins, Mrs. Theodore Tiller, Mrs. Morris Sheppard, Mrs. Philip Clancy, Mrs. Maurice Thatcher, Mrs. Theo J. Morgan, Mrs. Benjamin D. Hill, Mrs. Victor Zelow, Miss Celeste Mumford, Miss Alice Kuhn, Mrs. Emma M. Triepel and Miss Roberta P. Wakefield.

Lothian to Loan Garden for Fete To Aid Allies

The British Ambassador, Lord Lothian, is loaning the British Embassy garden to the D. C. Federation of Women's Clubs for a garden party on September 6. Mrs. Ernest Humphrey Daniel is president of the club. The party will be for the benefit of the Allies.

The coordinating committee for emergency work is making plans for the event. Mrs. John Lucker is chairman of this committee.

Clarke Paulson Will Sing Before University Women

Clarke A. Paulson will give a program of songs at a tea tomorrow afternoon at the clubhouse of the American Association of University Women. He will be accompanied by Miss Mary Carney.

This will be Mr. Paulson's second appearance before the University Women's Club this summer. He sang before the group first in July. Mr. Paulson is a pupil at Peabody Conservatory and a member of the choir of St. John's Church.

Hostesses tomorrow afternoon will be Mrs. Alton Hodgkins and Miss Janet Frost.

Y. W. Groups Plan Picnics During Week

Two Set Tomorrow; Dance Will Be Held On Roof Friday Night

Members of the Elizabeth Somers Glee Club and Business Girls will leave the Y. W. C. A. at 5 o'clock tomorrow for a picnic in Rock Creek Park.

Another group of local girls will embark for Kamp Kahlert, on West River in Maryland, tomorrow morning. The bus leaves the Y. W. C. A. at 9:30 o'clock. The camp will close September 2, with perhaps a special week-end and a planned program of entertainment.

An outdoor breakfast is planned for Girl Reserve members Tuesday at 7:30, followed by skating or bicycling near Tidal Basin.

A children's class in swimming began Friday. This class meets every Tuesday and Thursday at 2:30. The swimming period with coaching is continuing through August. This group meets Monday, Wednesday and Friday from 9:30 to 10:30. An adult beginners' class will begin August 22 at 7 o'clock. Anyone is welcome to join the groups after a doctor's examination.

The members of the junior summer program at the Y. W. C. A. plan their own outings. During the week they meet and enjoy tennis, swimming and handcraft, and as a special event a picnic is scheduled. Next Thursday the girls will go on a picnic, leaving at 10 o'clock.

There will be a Y. M.-Y. W. C. A. dance on the roof of the Y. W. Friday night from 9 to 12 o'clock.

On Saturday, August 24, "World-Wide Premiere," camp play of 1940, will be presented by the dramatic group at Kamp Kahlert. Miss Jane Wright, a graduate of Winthrop College, 1940, is the dramatic and modern dancing counselor.

Your Shopping Reporter

I am a woman with an urge to splurge, as what lady isn't? Clothes are my cake but the budget says "bread" . . . life is like that when earnings and yearnings are as far apart as peanuts and pate de foie gras. My wardrobe is a swan dying . . . another week's wear and I'll be hauled in for impersonating the Spirit of Summer out of season. Dresses are messes, hats hang by a hair, my girdles have curdles, my shoes have the blues. Equally shocking are my stockings. BUT up "pops my shops" with offerings, values and materials so important I'm beginning to see daylight. If you're in the same down-trodden condition as I, perhaps a thorough reading of this column will help you, too.

"FINAL CLOSE-OUT OF FORMAL DRESSES" . . . and, believe it or not, dresses in this group were marked at 19.98. For quick clearance Y'VEL'S have tagged them 3.98 and 5.00. Perfectly lovely, graceful formals of net, marquisette, chiffon and crepe in delicate shades and new styles. Just the dress to "fill in" . . . many suitable for fall parties. Daytime and afternoon frocks—values to 12.98, NOW 2.00 and 2.98. Better dresses—values to 16.98, NOW 5.00. These are "real buys," so dash into Y'VEL'S tomorrow and get the pick of the lot. 3415 CONN. AVE. Open evenings.

"EDUCATION BEGINS AT THE PALAIS ROYAL" . . . When the school bell rings you'll be ready with your wardrobe if you visit the "School and College Shop" on the Third Floor. The best incentive for returning to learning is an adequate supply of dresses, hats, coats, sweaters and skirts, blazers, sport dresses, formals, shoes . . . and jewelry, gloves and bags . . . not mentioning the "unmentionables." Blithe devotee of education, champion of student youth, apparel tutor to the book toter . . . here is a group of school clothes that are actually inspiring! Go to the "School and College Shop" and learn WHAT'S! WHAT! for back-to-books.

"HATS ARE ELEGANT" . . . flattering, distinguished, this year. Much less nonsense and more hat is the theme of LILLIAN GUSACK'S fall collection. Her 2.00 and 3.00 hats are far lovelier than hats to be found elsewhere at these prices. Every conceivable new color, style and fabric await you at this charming salon. 5022 CONN. AVE. Open evenings.

"LEAVE IT TO ME AND ADMIRAL BYRD" . . . to discover "cool" spots. No matter how sultry it is in the city . . . there's always a gentle breeze stirring on the lawns, terraces or arbors of NORMANDY FARM. Vegetables from their own gardens are served on their luncheon and dinner menus. Delightful, warm weather dishes and tempting, gay desserts round out a delightful repast at NORMANDY FARM. You'll love it there this time of the year. ROCKVILLE 382.

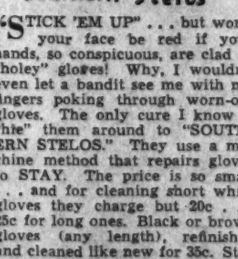
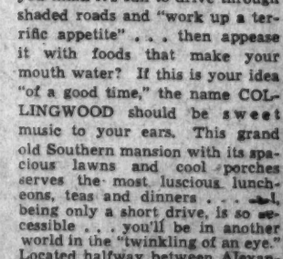
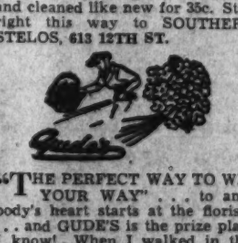
"A TEMPTING PICTURE NO ARTIST CAN PAINT" . . . Georgeous fruits, piled high; fresh crisp vegetables, right from the garden; delicately browned baked goods; plump, fresh poultry; sugar-cured hams, handsome cuts of meats! Doesn't this suggest the name of a very fine food store to you? Right you are, LIVINGSTON MARKET, "Where Quality and Service Reign Supreme" . . . a phrase rightfuly earned by Harry Spund. They'll deliver to your door. WO. 2374. 5516 CONN. AVE.



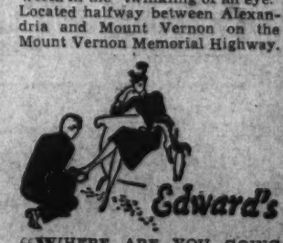
"STICK 'EM UP" . . . but won't your face be red if your hands, so conspicuous, are clad in "holey" gloves! Why, I wouldn't even let a bandit see me with my fingers poking through worn-out gloves. The only cure I know is "he" them around to "SOUTHERN STELOS." They use a machine method that repairs gloves to STAY. The price is so small . . . and for cleaning short white gloves they charge but 20c . . . 25c for long ones. Black or brown gloves (any length), refinished and cleaned like new for 35c. Step right this way to SOUTHERN STELOS, 613 12TH ST.



"WHERE ARE YOU GOING MY PRETTY SUEDE?" . . . And the answer is: everywhere. EDWARD'S present symphonies in suede (and, of course leather, too) in black and brown . . . the newest, smartest and most practical footwear for fall. NATIONALLY KNOWN SHOES, for a fraction of their worth. EDWARD'S PRICES 5.95 and 6.95. 3416 14TH ST. N.W. AD. 9015. Open evenings.



"THE PERFECT WAY TO WIN YOUR WAY" . . . to anybody's heart starts at the florist's . . . and GUDE'S is the prize place I know! When I walked in this week I thought I was transported to an English garden, and I ordered ever so many little remembrances. Exquisite fall cut flowers in glorious autumnal colorings are a treat for the eye. They mean so much to those who get them—and they're so inexpensive at this grand shop. You'll find exquisite, long-lasting plants, too, at unusually low prices. They'll be sent "across the street or across the miles" from any of the GUDE Shops. Just cal DI. 8450.



"DO YOU LIKE TO DINE IN THE COUNTRY?" . . . Do you think it's fun to drive through shaded roads and "work up a terrific appetite" . . . then appease it with foods that make your mouth water? If this is your idea "of a good time," the name COLLINGWOOD should be sweet music to your ears. This grand old Southern mansion with its spacious lawns and cool porches serves the most luscious luncheons, teas and dinners . . . and, being only a short drive, is so accessible . . . you'll be in another world in the "twinkling of an eye." Located halfway between Alexandria and Mount Vernon on the Mount Vernon Memorial Highway.

Ships' Return Brings Visitors to Annapolis

Training Cruise Over, Midshipmen Go on Leave Until September 13; Navy Folk Kept Busy Entertaining

THE RETURN of the first and third classes of midshipmen from their annual summer practice cruise brought an influx of mid-week visitors to Annapolis the past week. Te battleships returned to the Naval Academy on Wednesday and the midshipmen landed at Annapolis the next day, to go on leave until September 13. Relatives and friends gathered here from all parts of the country to greet the returning midshipmen and to accompany them home for the month's holiday.

The second class midshipmen, who remained at the Academy during the early summer, also went on leave August 13. Half of the membership of this class has been cruising off the Atlantic Coast on destroyers during the past few weeks.

Capt. H. A. Baldridge, curator of the Naval Acalemy Museum, returned recently from California, where he was joined by his son, Ensign Edward S. Baldridge, who returned to Annapolis with him. Ensign Baldridge this week reported to the U. S. S. McKenzie for duty. Mrs. Baldridge, who has been visiting her mother, Mrs. R. G. Smith, of Long Island, N. Y., is now at home here.

CAPT. AND MRS. Calvin H. Cobb are among the new arrivals at the Naval Academy, having moved this week into quarters in Porter road, on the Academy reservation. Capt. Cobb succeeded Capt. James G. Ware as head of the department of modern languages.

Commander and Mrs. E. J. Goodbody have had as guests Capt. and Mrs. James M. Minter, who shortly will move into quarters at the Naval Academy. Capt. Minter relieved Capt. Reynolds Hayden as head medical officer of the yard.

Miss Betty Tyler, daughter of Commander and Mrs. G. B. Tyler, has returned from Montezuma, Ga., where she was the guest for a fortnight of Mrs. John B. Guerry. Miss Tyler had Mr. and Mrs. Wayne Denny, of New Haven, Conn., as week-end guests.

Mrs. Arthur Burneston Owens has returned to The Hill, her country home at Greenock, Md., after a visit to Mr. and Mrs. Paul W. Nielson, in Darien, Conn., and a motor trip to New England.

MAJ. E. E. LARSON, U. S. M. C., Navy football coach, returned Monday night from a two-weeks' visit in Minneapolis, Minn., where he and Mrs. Larson and daughter, Mary Alice, visited his mother, Mrs. A. T. Larson.

Prof. and Mrs. William E. Farrell are at their home, 21 Southgate avenue, after a visit to friends in Maine.

Lieut.-Comdr. and Mrs. Philip Van Horn Weems have had their daughter, Mrs. Charles Dodds, with them for several weeks. Before her marriage last Christmas, Mrs. Dodds was Miss Margaret Thackray Weems.

Mrs. Hawley C. Waterman and daughter, Suzanne, of Quantico, Va., are spending a week with Mrs. Waterman's mother, Mrs. R. L. Duvall, at Moss Haven, Annapolis.

Miss Helen Dorn Halpine, daughter of Lieut.-Comdr. Charles G. Halpine, U. S. N. (retired), and Mrs. Halpine, will be married August 21 to John Stephen Eversole, son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry G. Eversole, of Columbus, Ohio. The wedding will take place in the Naval Academy Chapel with Chaplain W. N. Thomas officiating. Mr. Eversole, who was graduated from the Naval Academy in the class of 1939, is connected with the Tidewater Oil Co. of New York.

E. R. Feagan, Eulah E. Wood Are Married

Ceremony Performed At Idylwood Home Of Bride's Parents

Gladioli and ferns formed the setting for the marriage yesterday afternoon of Miss Eulah Edith Wood, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Stephen C. Wood, of Idylwood, Va., to Eugene Riley Feagan, son of Mrs. Pauline Feagan, of Alexandria. The ceremony took place at the Wood home, the Rev. Mr. Finnegan, of Alexandria, officiating.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore white marquisette with appliqued lace and carried white roses. Her sister, Miss Marion May Wood, served as maid of honor, wearing pink organza and carrying blue asters. Hugh F. Burke was best man.

A reception followed the ceremony. Mrs. Wood wore blue lace with a corsage of pink roses and the bridegroom's mother was dressed in white crepe de chine.

After a wedding trip to Canada, the couple will make their home at the Gunston Hall Apartment, Alexandria. As her going-away costume the bride wore a pink tailored dress with white accessories. Both are graduates of Strayer's Business College and the bride is a member of Sigma Eta Sigma Society.

To Be September Bride

What Does a Service Wife Do In a Hurricane? One Writes Blow-by-Blow Account in Letter

By Elizabeth Henney

What does a service wife do in the middle of a hurricane? Well, one I know of, after securing everything as well as possible, calmly sat down and typed a letter to her family, giving then a moment-by-moment pen picture of the goings-on of rampant Nature. And so, with her family's permission, I quote you some of it.

Marine Barracks,
Parris Island, S. C.
August 11, 1940.

Dear Family:

As you have probably never received a letter written during a hurricane and as the chances are that you never will again, I thought you might enjoy the experience.

It is now 11:30 a. m. I awoke about 9 this morning after quite a hilarious dance at the club, remarked to Bob that we were having quite a rainstorm, turned over and went back to sleep again. About 10 the phone rang and it was Nora saying that the storm warnings were out all along the coast and we had better get our awnings secured. By that time the rain was blowing and the wind howling dreadfully.

By the time we were dressed, which you may rest assured did not take very long, the guard had called to notify us that a hurricane was expected to hit the island this afternoon or this evening and to be prepared. Bob went out and fixed the awnings and I corralled Rosa and we got everything in off the porches, which were already rain-swept; shut all the windows and doors and removed the china from anywhere in the vicinity of windows that were liable to break . . .

The electric power plant has already gone and we have no lights, refrigeration, or means of cooking, but we have a fairly adequate supply of canned goods in the house that we can eat cold and our lunch will consist of canned tuna fish, baked beans and bread and jam. In case the water plant goes I have filled the tub and basins with water.

Meanwhile, the storm is increasing momentarily in volume and it is really a thrilling sight. We already have a small tree, which has been blown into our front yard, and of course my poor garden is ruined. Great gusts of rain hit the house and the wind is howling like a banshee. Cars are still moving around and of course we are in no real danger until it hits, which will be some hours yet. It is a very novel sensation, just sitting and waiting for something like that to come and wondering just how it will hit. Having no experience in hurricanes I am at a loss as to what to do; would like to put my Crown Derby in a safe place but don't know where . . .

2:15 p. m.

The wind is terrific now and all motor traffic has stopped. Bob got back from the barracks all right with some coffee and some salami and we lunched. Rosa (the maid) has disappeared completely, is not in her quarters. Probably they are all congregating together some place.

We have taken all the china ornaments down and put them in drawers, wrapped in linen, as the last two gusts of wind have shaken the house terrifically and we are getting all the things out of the den as it is flooding.

Standing on the front porch in raincoats we watched the big chinaberry tree in the yard go over. It was magnificent but had the unfortunate result of producing hysterics in Hassell (Editor's Note: a neighbor who came over to stay with them during the storm). She is somewhat comforted now, however. The telephone has gone, so we are completely marooned. Personally I cannot bring myself to feel fear yet, it is such a magnificent and awesome experience. Probably when it really hits it will be pretty ghastly though.

I hope that you have not heard about it and are not too worried about us . . .

Our drain pipes have just blown loose from the side of the house and are flopping around to beat——. I hope they don't smash through and break a window . . . The shingles are all off the Murphys' roof next door . . .

3:40 p. m.

They say the center of the storm is past and it will veer around and hit us from the other side now. During the temporary lull we went out and took a spin in the car. Had to form a chain to get out to it, the wind was so strong. The post is a mess. The Murphys' garage has blown down and so have their servants' quarters. Poor Hassell's garage blew down with her car in it, but the car, fortunately, does not seem too badly damaged. All the wires are down, the top of the water tank off and big trees are all over the place. We couldn't get as far as the main station, as it appears to be completely flooded and the road to it is impassable.

We didn't stay long, as the wind has picked up again and is hitting with renewed violence. The screen door to our kitchen has gone and the floor of the den is flooded.

When life will ever resume its normal trend, heaven only knows, and certainly Parris Island will never look the same again . . .

7:30 p. m.

The worst is over and never again if I can help it. I don't think it is fear that makes people dread these things, but the horrid annoyance of them once the worst is past and the thrill and cruel beauty of it is gone.

We are at present merely wet, damp and uncomfortable. The roof of this jerry-built shack has, of course, decided to leak in half a dozen different places. The kitchen and pantry are flooded and I have every saucepan and bowl in the house under the other leaks trying to save the other rooms. Now I know why people gave me so many silver bowls for wedding presents . . .

It is, naturally, dark now and we have no light but candles, but we managed to get a little fire started in the hearth. One bucket of coal won't last long though.

Bob is out on a reconnaissance car getting medical supplies for the rifle range from the main station.

8:30 p. m.

The whole darn roof is leaking and I am afraid everything we own will be ruined. I have given up wearing shoes, as they get wet through immediately. Bob is back with nothing but tales of disaster. They just managed to get through and the parade ground is under 3 feet of water and water is up over the front porches of all the waterfront quarters from which all the occupants have been evacuated. The dock is washed away, the motor boat sunk and the roof blown off headquarters.

Tuesday, 1 p. m.

Well, we have another day and we are still alive, but I think that we shall never be dry again. The wind has subsided, but it is still raining hard and the roof is leaking. All the walls are covered with beads of moisture and all the furniture is mildewed. If you sit down on something you are immediately wet through. I am keeping a fire going, but I'm afraid to look at my clothes.

Rosa's quarters are completely flooded and we spent a strange night. Rosa sleeping on the porch sofa in the living room. Hassell, on one of the beds in our room, moved over to the only nonleaky spot. Bob is on the bed in the spare room and I on a rescued mattress in the living room, as I felt duty-bound to get up every so often and empty the bowls and basins.

This morning Bob went over to the battalion and has a working party out trying to clear trees away. Hassell, Alice and I went up and had breakfast at the main station mess along with 900 recruits and various othe rforlorn souls they were trying to feed. We really had a good breakfast of scrambled eggs and bacon, coffee in big thick mugs and hunks of bread. The morning we spent touring the post, seeing the damage done and taking pictures. It is even more of a mess than we thought yesterday, with many garages blown away, trees down everywhere, roofs and sides of houses blown in . . .

We will be quite all right here, though somewhat uncomfortable, and goodness only knows when we will get home. That is the horrid part about it . . .

As for eating, we are faring royally for the moment. We had lunch at the Fourth Battalion mess and it was excellent. Stew, spinach, peas and potatoes.

Hassell is clamoring to go down to the postoffice, so I leave you now.

Very much love,
NANCY.

The New Hats Are a Lesson in American History

Marshall Adams

By Marshall Adams,
The Post Fashion Editor.

WOMEN used to demand flattery from a new hat. What they'll get this fall is flattery (in some cases), plus an outburst of patriotism and a study in history.

A lesson in American history—that's the key to many of the new hats, and New York milliners are having a field day thinking up ways and means of rousing national feeling. And why not? With the exception of French-born Lilly Dache, every top milliner in the country is an American. Count them off—the Frederics brothers, the Knox designers, Howard Hodge, who travels with his decorative headgear from one end of the continent to the other as easily as if he were dashing from here to Baltimore; Howard Greer, of Hollywood; Florence Reichman, of the great Northwest and consequently New York, and Sally Victor, who of all the native designers comes most into her all-American element this fall.

Sally Victor is one reason for the rapidly growing preference for American "originals." She is the first American milliner to be accorded the title of a creative designer by snobbish class magazines. Now, in her hats she has gone back to earlier periods of American history to reawaken our interest in those colorful eras. Sally, patriotic to her thimble finger, did a series of historic hats last year when she brought out Pilgrim Father sailors, Puritan lass bonnets and Peter Stuyvesant felts with "peg-legged crowns."

Made In the U. S. A.

NOW, unfettered by Agnes, Talbot, Descat, Valois et al. of Paris, a fresh page is opened for millinery made in the U. S. A. and born of the U. S. A. Especially exciting is the inspiration derived from the Western Mormon empire which made Brigham Young's name and reputation famous. Maybe you don't want to be a Mormon, but you might want a Mormon number of hats this fall and winter because each hat, designed by Sally Victor with a different wife in mind, has its own quota of flattery.

There are two Mormon silhouettes for fall. There's the square, high crown with big brim and grosgrain band, courtesy of head man Brigham. There's a square crown and little brim curled up in front to display pompadours, courtesy of Emily, Rachel, etc., etc., fancied up with flowers, veiling and feathers, all inspiration springing from the valley of the Great Salt Lake.

Speaking of feathers, you're likely to get a handful with your new chapeau. Big Chief Sitting Bull had much to do with this return to aboriginal headgear. John Frederics goes so far as to perch feathers and a peace pipe on a big felt. The pipe, says the unpredictable Mr. John, really can be smoked, but there is no guarantee of peace and quiet following the wearer of this novel headdress.

Felt And Feathers

SALLY VICTOR also does a number of brave young felt, trimmed with guinea hen plumage as well as square-brimmed velvets faced with peacock breast feathers. There's a neat cap, too, reminiscent of both Daniel Boone and Chief Umhum's warrior plumage. The two Annas, new names in American millinery, have done a chieftain red felt, sitting far back of your pompadour and plastered with a wing spread of quills. Dache and Reichman let the tormented red man alone, content to create Latin-American and Cuban sombreros.

Sounds queer—but New York is already taking these millinery lessons in history seriously, and as Manhattan goes, so goes the Nation's styles. Debs have taken the feathered topknot to their heads and collegians getting ready for school have gone overboard for the Brigham Young "stove pipes," which they wear carelessly on the back of their heads.

Actually, the idea of reviewing folklore via headgear isn't any more giddy than the "bright ideas" put in our heads by French designers in the past. Sally Victor, at least, doesn't confine her efforts to silhouettes alone. She interprets hats in fabrics identified with the growth of the Nation from the broadcloth small clothes of George Washington's day to the suede of Teddy Roosevelt's Rough Rider period. There is even sturdy corduroy used for modern pompadour hats, a fabric of real importance today when American vigor is at a peak.

Many women like a fairly large brimmed hat to wear with first fall woolens. Sally Victor designs a "Wild Western" one (above) of early American inspiration in shaggy green beaver felt.

For extremists in pompadour coiffures, Designer Victor proposes a young and slightly daft turban (right). It's of metallic threaded rust jersey with a couple of parrots aft for that feathered affect.

One of the most wearable versions of the "skull cap," calot, "Juliet cap" or what you will is shown above. This one by Knox, maker of many hat classics, is of black quilted felt, softened by a lacy veil and pierced with a quill.

The small, dashing profile hat (right) is flattering against tall fur collars and even more flattering against attractive profiles. It is modeled here by Mary Martin, of stage and screen.

Out of My Mind

By Katharine Brush

Far Rockaway sounds nicer than it is, and also farther. The landscape of Virginia is polite and stately, like the people. Does anyone live in Taos besides Mabel Dodge Luhan and Tony? If you're a native of Jacksonville, you can call it "Jax," but if you're a stranger you may not.

The pigeons at Atlantic City are altogether too tame. The Great Lakes look like the ocean, but they neither feel nor taste like it. Detroiters insist that Grosse Pointe is part of Detroit, but to visitors trying to get there from the center of town it seems nearer Alaska. Who invented those green-or-red-knobbed rocking chairs you see everywhere on summer hotel porches? The signs in St. Augustine say: "To the Fountain of Youth," which is bewildering. I mean I thought Ponce de Leon never did find it?

The guides at Gettysburg can certainly spoil the battlefields for you—and will, if you give them half a chance. They drone away like bumblebees. There are natives of Nantucket Island who still speak of "going to America" whenever they cross to the mainland, which is no oftener than they can help. Wouldn't you think those high-heeled boots the Texans wear would hurt their feet on pavements. Do you remember when slot machines sat on the sidewalks of every Florida city? I love the name of the Rubber Bar in the Portage Hotel at Akron.

Chicago seems to baffled visitors to have too many railroad stations. The famous red carpet they put down for the Twentieth Century Limited isn't really red—it's a kind of beige with a red border. Where do those razor blades go which disappear into the slots in trains—and when the receptacle fills up, what do they have to do, rebuild the whole car? I wish I had a nickel for every hotel chambermaid who has ever waked me out of a sound sleep to say, "Would you like your room made up now, or later?"

North-of-Boston people have a different accent from south-of-Boston people, even though the distance between their home towns be not more than 20 miles. Prof. Hooton, of Harvard, has a son named Newton Hooton. I also know a girl named Kitty Chick, in Norwood, Mass. Nothing in America looks lonelier than a lighthouse, unless it be a farm on a Dakota prarie. What goes on in Utah, now that Brigham Young is dead? I like the courteous way the guards at the entrance to Yellowstone say, "Any guns, Madam?"

When you go from New York to California by railroad, your tickets look like the serpentines you throw on New Year's Eve. I shall never get used to those little fraction-of-a-penny coins they have in (for instance) Kansas City. Sometimes it seems to the motorist that the broad cement highways of the Carolinas were built expressly for mama pigs with flocks of piglets to amble across.

It is time we allowed all those jokes about Brooklyn to die of senility. I am fascinated by the trolly cars that toil up the slopes of San Francisco and the casual way the motorman whirls them around at the top. Do Chicagoans drink Bourbon exclusively, or does it just seem that way? For how many years is smoking going to be forbidden in the air-conditioned cars of trains? Must we skulk in the ladies' room forever? If air conditioning works—and even overworks, as it's apt to do on trains—whom would the smoke annoy? Answer me that.

Takoma Park-Silver Spring Engagements Hold Spotlight

Mr. and Mrs. Richard Henry Carter Beverley are spending the week in Atlantic City.

Miss Corinne T. Reardon and Mrs. John M. Lunt have returned from visits at Rehoboth Beach, Del., and Old Point Comfort, Va.

MISS HARRIET HERNDON will entertain tomorrow evening in honor of Miss Sara Jean Moss, whose wedding to Bertram Goods Dienelt will take place Saturday.

Dr. and Mrs. George S. Rice entertained last Sunday evening at their home at Wellington in honor of John Clagett Proctor, of Washington.

WILLIAM HARVEY SMITH motored to Clifton Forge the past week-end to return with Mrs. Smith, who had been visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. L. C. McGuire.

Mrs. J. C. McCluer, Miss Betty McCluer and Mrs. J. C. Fowlkes left last week for a two-week trip to New York.

Champagne Wood

High lights of the recent Chicago furniture market included much pale oak, maple combined with panels of caning, and new shades of bleached woods such as champagne and deep tan. An interesting innovation noted on many chests was the absence of hardware, pulls being provided by grooves and panels concealed in the wood construction.

Consensus Home Proves Public's Right

Dwelling Shows Value of Judgment Of Average Person

That the judgment of the general public may be relied on regarding fine home construction is being revealed to thousands of visitors by "The Consensus House," shown in The Hamlet, Chevy Chase, Md. In building this Washington Post-sponsored dwelling, George B. Hatley, heading the construction company bearing his name, was guided by the advice of thousands of home-minded persons whom he polled for opinions on what is best in a home.

This model residence took its name from this consensus of opinion. Beautifully furnished by Mayer & Co. and featuring an all-electric kitchen by General Electric, it is located at 7007 Glendale road, just east of Connecticut avenue, and may be seen by traveling the following route: Out Connecticut avenue beyond Chevy Chase Circle to Leland street, turn right into The Hamlet (development of the George B. Hatley Co.) to Glendale road and then left half a block.

A majority of the voters favored Williamsburg (Va.) architecture for the home; in fact, the show house follows the general design of the Governor's mansion in that celebrated colony, particularly with regard to roof line and dormer windows. Its generous-sized room planning allows utmost comfort and provides living room, dining room, kitchen, butler's pantry, study and bath with stall shower on the first floor; three spacious bedrooms and two baths on the second, paneled game room and lavatory in the basement. A servant's apartment with bath is situated over the two-car attached garage.

The kitchen contains the latest equipment know to science. And is as completely electric and automatic as is possible today. Its metal cabinets are entirely new to the public. These are equipped with wire shelves, some sliding and some stationary, drawers having roller bearings. The design includes self-closing doors that are sound-proofed and the cabinets are finished with "Glyptal" enamel, baked on at extremely high temperature. This gives a hard finish which resists scratching and chipping. Hardware is matched.

The "Super-Freezer" refrigerator is extra large making entertaining easier. Of stainless steel, it can turn out 80 ice cubes every 50 minutes. There are four ice trays and the interior lights up automatically. The refrigerator has the same finish as the cabinets.

From the time you enter the front door of this home until you depart you will be impressed with the practical, appropriate and artistic furnishings in each room. Predominately Georgian with a feeling of the elegant and graceful Regency style, the furniture is notable for its suitability to requirements of present-day households. As the design and plan of the house have been based on a poll of opinion, so have the decorators selected furnishings on the basis of what the average Washington family wants in its search for tasteful, quality furniture without too large investment.

Suburban Gardens Plan $302,000 Project

Suburban Gardens, Inc., owner, applied last week at the District Building for a permit to erect an apartment project in northeast Washington, costing $302,000. It consists of 13 two-story brick apartment buildings in the 4900 and 5000 blocks of Jay and Just streets and Sheriff road northeast. A. Lloyd Goode Construction Co. is the builder and Harvey Warwick, the architect. The buildings will contain 204 units subdivided into 749 rooms.

D. C. Home Construction Booming Under FHA Plan

Units to Provide for 40,000 Persons Erected in Washington Area, Report Shows; Officials Expect Greater Future Increase

Construction of enough living units to accommodate approximately 40,000 persons in the Washington area has been accomplished through facilities of the Federal Housing Administration, it was revealed yesterday by H. Loy Anderson, district director of that agency.

In addition to families obtaining new living quarters by means of the insured mortgage plan, more than 25,000 other families have modernized and repaired existing establishments, thus improving their standard of living, he reported.

Altogether, he said, more than $56,000,000 of private capital has been brought out to finance this improvement in living accommodations in this locality.

Mr. Anderson reported that through June 1940, the District office of FHA had accepted for insurance 4,797 mortgages totaling $36,537,040 covering small residential properties to be built under FHA inspection. In addition, 19 rental housing projects comprising 4,899 family units had been erected by means of FHA-insured mortgages totaling $17,243,000, and representing about 80 per cent of the appraised value of these properties. Some of the larger of these projects include Buckingham, Falkland Properties, Arlington Village and Colonial Village.

A total of 26,812 Title I notes in the amount of $12,694,660 used entirely for repair and modernization purposes, had been reported in this area up until the end of June, 1940. Mr. Anderson said that despite this impressive amount of new home financing, which has already taken

Home Sales Continue Steady Rise

Advance Goes on Throughout First Seven Months of 1940

Sales of new houses in Washington have continued their steady rise throughout the first seven months of the current year total for that time reflecting gains over aggregates for corresponding periods of the preceding three years.

An August preliminary report of Washington Business Review states sale of new homes in this city for January through July amounted to 1,238, as compared with 1,148 for the like period last year, 1,010 in the seven months of 1938 and 912 in the seven months of 1937. There were 181 new houses sold here last month,

How to Have Hot Water That's Really Automatic

Now we can have really automatic hot water by installing a neat little cabinet all nicely finished in baked enamel that would look well in any kitchen. It contains a heating coil based on the latest theories of heat transmission.

With one gas burner it gives instantaneous hot water whenever a faucet is turned on. No tank is needed, and the gas only goes on when the water is actually wanted.

Summer Home May Need Repairs

Owners of summer homes, lodges, or cabins which are used only occasionally may find that such places of recreation require repairs after the ravages of severe summer electrical storms.

Roofs may need new covering, windows may have been shattered, screening ripped, flooring warped, basements inundated, terraces washed away, or other minor disasters which may have occurred are the natural consequences of such storms.

Advice on Redecorating

When redecorating the room, paint pipes and radiators in a shade to match the walls and thus render them inconspicuous. Remember, however, that the lighter the tint used, the more heat given off. Flat paint is the best of type of coating to use.

Insulation Can Reduce Cost of Owning Home

The use of complete house insulation can reduce the cost of owning a house as much as 10 per cent.

"Heating enineers have proved with practical field tests," said B. C. earn, of the ohns-Manville Sales Corporation, Home Insulation Division, "that the use of complete wall and roof insulation in one of the $2,500 houses recently made possible by new FHA provisions, nets enough fuel savings to pay as much as 10 per cent of the monthly carrying charges on a 25-year FHA mortgage. This is equivalent to reducing the cost of the house as much as 10 per cent."

Curtains Painted On

Many of the adobe homes in the Southwest are using permanent draperies in the form of painted glass. Gay and brilliant designs are applied to door and window panes.

The Week in Real Estate

By Thomas M. Cahill

An interesting article regarding a local real estate organization appears in the current issue of Freehold magazine. The writer conducting the forum section of that publication, has this to say about a well-known Washington firm.

F. L. SANDOZ

"Having been informed that at 2 Dupont circle in Washington, D. C., we would find a realtor organization composed almost of former naval, Army and Marine Corps officers, or their relatives, we proceeded up the front steps of Sandoz, Inc., with a feeling that upon entering perhaps we had better click our heels together and stand at attention. We didn't do it, of course, simply because once inside we found the organization looking just like so many others we have visited.

"President F. L. Sandoz (commander, United States Navy, retired) spoke proudly of his organization, half of which includes people who have been identified with some branch of the Nation's armed forces. Three of the exceptions are close relatives of someone in the service: Harvey L. Jones, first vice president, whose father was a classmate of President Sandoz: Thomas Sandoz, second vice president, son of the founder; Mrs. Finn, member of the sales staff, widow of an Army aviator killed sometime ago in a crash while on duty in the Philippines. Secretary Lawrence T. Weir is the only member of the organization not so closely tied up to the Nation's military or naval forces.

"On the sales staff are W. S. Domer, lieutenant, United States Navy, retired; R. G. Payne, major, United States Army, retired; C. P. Meyer, captain, United States Marines, retired; A. K. Boysen, who had served several years with the Danish Legation. Another member of the staff until recently was C. R. Sanderson, retired from the United States Marine Quartermaster Corps, but who was recently recalled by the Government to help complete the current defense plans."

Announcement is made that Samuel J. Roberts has become associated with the office of Eugene M. Fry in the handling of real estate sales, insurance and rentals.

Mr. and Mrs. Paul O. Drury have been vacationing at Wedgeport, Nova Scotia.

Vice President and Sales Manager Dean M. Rathbun, of W. C. & A. N. Miller Development Co., and Mrs. Rathbun went to New York State for a visit.

George A. Wilson, accompanied by Mrs. Wilson and their daughter, Dorothy Avis, are leaving today for Kennebunkport and Bar Harbor, Me., returning after Labor Day.

Members of the Franks Phillips' office took a fishing trip last Wednesday. The J. Garrett Beitzell office personnel also went fishing that day.

Thomas Sandoz and family have been vacationing at Cape May.

D. C. Work Booms Under FHA PLAN

place, the current outlook is for an even greater expansion in small home construction, particularly through the medium of FHA-insured financing. He said that applications for mortgage insurance in July of this year more than doubled the number received in the corresponding month of 1939.

Local private lending institutions, he continued, last month submitted 530 applications totaling $2,971,100 for insurance compared with 261 in the same month last year. For the first six months of 1940, 3,021 applications totaling $16,211,950 were submitted as against 2,441 in the amount of $13,573,600 in the same 1939 period.

"Thus far," Mr. Anderson stated, "we have not experienced even a seasonal letdown. In fact, activity of the last two or three months has been mainly responsible for the impressive gain shown for the first six months of this year due to the fact that a hard winter stalled considerable construction activity in the early months.

"It was apparent that another reason for our increase in business is that more and more home buyers these days are insisting that protective features of the FHA-insured mortgage system be included in their home building plans."

Consensus House Now on Display

manner wit ha modified feeling of Regency in the small accessory tables. A Chippendale sofa of solid Honduras mahogany, with carved bal land claw feet, is upholstered in striped damask with a deep rose or wine color predominating and contrasting graciously with the green twisted yarn broadloom carpeting and figured draperies with light sepia background.

Facing each other at the fireplace are two luxurious chairs—one a down-pillow back Georgian; the other, a higher back Victorian in tones to reflect light and comfort. Convenient, too, is the radio and an interesting curio cabinet at the far end of the room. A gold upholstered barrel chair near the entrance balances a Sheraton wall table on the opposite side.

Into the dining room traditional furniture, fashioned principally from Cuban mahogany, re-creates the charm associated with colonial mansions. Artistic details include pineapple and hobnail carvings on the cabinet pieces, fine pediment and typical fretwork in the china cupboard.

The 8-foot extension table has a platform base while the buffet and commode-type serving table provide storage space for linens and silverware. Graceful chairs, after the manner of our own American Duncan Phyfe, show inufience of the Regency style abroad. Linen-damask draperies are of rust and blend delightfully with the carefully chosen figured rug.

You will be pleased with the beauty and practicability of the entrance hall and den. The former has an inviting, historically interesting Fredericksburg chair reproduction, while console-commode and distinctive mirror provide beauty and usefulness. The den is a quiet retreat. A kidney shape kneehole desk and appropriate chair provide a place to sit, write and study. There is a love seat sofa that may be opened into a bed when unexpected overnight guests arrive.

Amateur Plumbers Can Imperil Health

Changing a washer on the kitchen sink or using a bent hairpin to clean out a clogged lavatory drain is about as far as the amateur plumber should go.

Any job that requires installation or changing of piping should be done by a professional; proper trapping and venting are essential to health, so no chances should be taken.

Thin Copper Sheeting Latest for the Walls

Something brand new in wall coverings that should solve many wall problems is being shown. It is very thin sheet copper and is hammered to give texture.

New view of future model home at 1 Williamsburg drive, in Indian Spring Village, Md. Being erected by Indian Spring Village, Inc., owner and developer of that section, and sponsored by The Washington Post, it will be furnished by Lansburgh's department store in what is known as the "Wishmaker's House" ensemble

Regency-Style Architecture To Mark New Model Home

Regency is the architectural design employed for a Washington Post-sponsored home being built at 1 Williamsburg drice, in Indian Spring Village, Md., by Indian Spring Village, Inc., owner and developer of that section. Designed by Eimer Capplemann, architect, the home will be opened to public inspection next month and will be furnished by Lansburgh's department store with what is known as the "Wishmaker's House" ensemble.

This year marks an enormous recrudescence of "Regency" and it is interesting to know somethig of the period and style of furnishigs which characterizes it. The period actually covered the years 1790-1820. It derive dits name partly from the Princeof Wales, eldest son of George III, and Queen Charlotte, named regent in 1811, as a result of his father's illness ad after whose death became George IV. Literally the term of his regency lasted nine years, but the period "Regnecy" in architecture, decoration, furniture and costumes is more elastic and representa a style which began before the prince became regent.

With reference to furnitures nd decoration, the "Regency" covers all English furniture in the "antique" style made during the 15 or 20 years before the institution of the "Regency" in 1811 and continued in voge forthe next 20 years, through the reign of George IV and William IV.

Regency style developed adapted from Greek, Roman and Eygptian, as well as Indian, Chinese and Gothic precedents. Development of richly carved ornament which had dominated a superior furniture product of the middle eighteenth century had been supplanted gradually by low relief or no carving at all, except in the designs of Thomas Hope and laterally by painted de-oc ration.

It is interesting to trace the subtle transitions from the designs shown in Sheraton books to those designers more closely associated with the "Regency" period. As the development progressed, metal ornament became a distinquishing feature of the style.

Most of the "Regency" furniture was excellent in design. Its simplicity of form and its moderate use of ornament relate its style to contemporary ideas and many current designs of contemporary flavor are similar in outline. There seems to be a recurrent interest in form, color and texture and the quality, grain, and color of wood. This is an important factor in the development of the furniture of tomorrow. Although there does not seem to be any desire to revive the extensive use of metal ornament on furniture, the medium itself is being successfully used as a structural material.

Bar Car Throbs With Spirit of '90's

A "Gay Nineties" mode of decoration has been adopted for the "Little Nugget" car of the 17-car streamliner, "City of Los Angeles," owned by the Union Pacific Railroad. The color scheme is highly Victorian in shades of gold and red, with accents of blue and turquoise. The Brussels carpet with cabbage rose pattern, the wall divisions—capped with cupids and other plaster ornaments—and the lace curtains overhung with red velvet and brass cornices all contribute to the desired effect.

American beauty red upholstery covers the Victorian furniture which is painted bone white with high lights of gold and a carving of hearts and roses. The table tops are painted black and white to give the effect of marble. Also in imitation of marble, but made of rubber is the top of the bar which is ornamented with cupids, pilasters and a gold sunburst effect.

The decorations of the bar include photos of dancers, clowns, minstrel show actors and vaudeville performers, while the highly ornamental lighting fixtures are brass brackets topped with gas globes reminiscent of gas lights in the 80's. The decorator of this car was Walt Kuhn, a nationally known artist. Mr. Kuhn also designed the "Frontier Shack," famous car of the streamlined "City of Denver" train.

Chain Restaurant Signs Lease For Building Site in Bethesda

Shannon & Luchs Co. announces closing of a long-term lease with Hot Shoppes, Inc. for the northeast corner of Wisconsin avenue and East-West highway in Bethesda, Md., for erection of one of that company's restaurants. The site comprises approximately 70,000 square feet and the restaurant will have a seating capacity of 175 persons. The owner was represented by the real estate department of Munsey Trust Co. Construction has been started and it is expected completion will be about December 15.

Other new leases recently negotiated by Shannon & Luchs Co. are Brooks Clothes, Inc., four-story building at 1012 F street northwest, on a long-term lease at undisclosed rental. Negotiations were made through Washington Loan & Trust Co., representing the owner as trustee. Alterations and improvements are to be made to make this location one of Brooks Clothes' modern shops.

Stanley H. Horner, Inc., has leased the large garage building and adjoining ground at 2135 Champlain street northwest from Robert F. Fleming. Central Realty Co., Inc., has leased for a long term 7711 Georgia avenue northwest in North Washington Shopping Center, to Rodger M. Minter as a men's wear store.

Frank C. Ford & Co. Inc., cleaners and dyers, have leased for a long term a location on Ordway street just east of Connecticut avenue. Robinson's Barber Shops will open a new location at 503 Twelfth street northwest on which they have taken a long term lease at undisclosed rental.

Pharaohs Knew A Thing or Two

Science has learned that the paint used in the tombs of the Pharaohs was of virtually the same composition as the paint of today and that it was in those early days commonly employed to preserve materials as well as to decorate.

40 States Now Register Architects

Forty States are now operating under registration laws for architects in addition to the District of Columbia, Alaska, Hawaii, the Philippine Islands and Puerto Rico.

States without registration laws are Kansas, Maine, Massachusetts, Missouri, Nevada, New Hampshire, Vermont and Wyoming. These States, with the possible exception of Vermont, are making a definite effort to pass registration laws, says a report of the committee on registration laws of the American Institute of Architects of which C. J. Charwarth, of Frankfort, Ky., is chairman.

Requirement for registration has become an established part of the profession of architecture in the United States, the committee points out.

New Product in Construction Termite Proof

'Stran Steel' Also Reduces Fire Hazard And Depreciation

Well-informed circles are expressing opinion that a new era in construction of houses and apartment buildings, in which termites and other vermin will be a thing of the past, and fire-hazard and depreciation greatly reduced, is now being ushered into Washington. Reason for this belief is introduction of a new product known as "Stran Steel" into the construction field.

This product consists of steel joists, studs, rafters and plates. Because there are metal products, they cannot be attacked by termites or other vermin, will not shrink, warp, or rot, and are fire resistant. Mass production methods make it possible to sell this product at a cost almost as low as lumber.

Formerly home owners and builders sometimes ran the risk of termites attacking the skeleton of their homes, possibility of fires destroying them, and a certain standard amount of depreciation due to warping and rotting. Now, they are assured the first will be a thing of the past, and the other two will be minimized considerably with the use of this product.

It can be used in the construction of a home almost exactly as if these members were made of lumber. A curved nailing groove, running down the center of each member makes it possible to nail boards and other collateral material to it very easily. A flange guides the nail and the groove then holds it with a grip of steel. The product has been offered to builders here and has met with enthusiastic response.

One of the first to recognize value of this product was Edward R. Carr. Incidentally Mr. Carr is a pioneer in the use of steel in the construction of houses; for approximately 12 years ago he was one of the first to build a house with a framework of steel—a very costly proposition in those days. Mr. Carr has used "Stran Steel" in construction of his garden apartment project, Shady Brook, at 4800 Conduit road northwest.

Because this product contains copper, its conductivity of sound is almost negligible, thus assuring occupants of the project almost soundproof apartments. The steel framework provides safety in case of lightning, and its nonwarping qualities have permitted Mr. Carr to decorate walls of the apartments very attractively because of elimination of the possibility of plaster cracks. The product also made it possible for him to reduce maintenance costs and depreciation charges and thus charge lower rentals than usual for apartments of this type.

Sponsored by THE WASHINGTON POST

As we predicted, The Consensus House has proved to be the most spectacular residential presentation in recent years. Thousands have inspected it during its first week's showing . . . just as thousands helped to plan this house through a comprehensive poll of public opinion.

The Consensus House proves that Washingtonians prefer the stately lines of old Colonial architecture . . . its motif is similar to the Governor's Mansion in Williamsburg. And in its appointments this house is superb . . . for everything has been provided to encourage the highest standard of luxury living.

On the first floor there is a large center entrance hall, a generous sized living room with screened porch adjoining in the rear, dining room, study, bath with stall shower, kitchen and butler's pantry. Three bedrooms and two tiled baths are on the second floor. Recreation room and lavatory in basement. Maid's apartment with bath, is over the two-car garage.

The Consensus House features the most modern equipment by GENERAL ELECTRIC . . . in the kitchen are the GE electric range, 8 cu. ft. refrigerator, dish washer, Disposall and GE de luxe steel cabinets. New GE silent mercury switches and Certified Adequate Wiring. GE automatic water heater make this one of the most up-to-date of all electrified houses.

The aristocratic beauty of this new home coupled with its distinguished environment, commend it to the family who demand the finest. Your inspection today will give you a new conception of modern home planning.

Architects' Group Gains Members

Eighteen out of 25 existing State architectural associations have affiliated or are in the process of affiliation with the American Institute of Architects, it is reported in the Octagon, official publication of the institute.

"This progress has demonstrated that the unification of the architectural profession presents a complex problem," it is declared. "It has become clear that all localities cannot be dealt with through a single method of organization. Local autonomy must be recognized in order that unification may best be accomplished.

"In some States, where population densities are great and where a number of institute chapters may exist, the formation of State organizations may prove the best method. In certain other States, where the boundaries of chapters may be coterminus with those of the State, it is possible to accomplish unification by extending the privileges of chapter membership in the association grades to the registered architects of those States."

Plate Glass Furniture Used In New Vogue

Modern Bedrooms Planned for Occupant's Interests, Activities

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin

Shades of the Merry Widow hat, the bobble skirt, high-button shoes! Many bedrooms in today's fashion take us back to days we remember with affection and amusement.

It isn't only because we're seeing fanciful iron beds again and pillow cases with ruffles around four sides, but that bedrooms are becoming important again, not just as places to dress in and sleep in, but as rooms of individuality planned for their particular occupant's interests and activities.

"Mother's room" is big once more. And once more it is the center of the household with her desk and sewing machine there, with easy chairs and book shelves and a radio, a room where she and father can spend the children's "date nights" comfortably.

Daughter's room often includes a small piano and is furnished as a sitting room, while the son of the family may have anything from a photographic darkroom to a carpenter's workroom. Recent exhibitions of bedrooms all bear out these trends, suggesting in addition many new decorative ideas.

Pristine

At a glance you'll see through the newly opened glass room in the America at Home exhibitions at the fair . . . bed, vanity and chairs are of plate glass. And wonderful they seem for summer, so cool and pristine looking; though for winter use we still have our fingers crossed, remembering that glass furniture is said to be chilly. Plastic furniture, giving the same effect as glass, isn't as cold and doesn't break as readily.

Another bedroom to stop the passer-by in the same pavilion at the fair is a young girl's room in pale blues. It has a round dressing table that sets out in the floor and swivels around like an old-time piano stool. This is a bright idea of the designer, Joseph Platt, notorious as the artist responsible for the sets of that recent Southern movie.

Very conversational also is a sports shack in quite a different mood, the offering of that most unsentimental of modernists, Donald Deskey. Here the sleeping facilities in the living room are incidental but none the less practical and comfortable. Two built-in sofas do an "abracadabra," the backs swinging up into a shelf-bunk, thus providing four beds out of two sofas.

As for double-decked beds in a year-round room, just to prove that they're not particular about being nautical, juvenile or cutie, there's a charming small bedroom worth seeing with pine-paneled walls and double-decked beds painted in a light off-white. Spreads, curtains and chair covers are done in an all-over figured cotton in off-white with the line pattern in red. Different, pretty, simple is a little bedroom with plain cream walls and a flowered wallpaper ceiling, the same flower pattern in chintz being used for curtains, spreads and dressing table skirt.

But the most hold-your-breath bedroom we've seen is one with the lacy iron headboard, reminiscent of the 1910's. This one, gilded but not brass, has no footboard and it is covered with an elegant shiny satin-surfaced bedspread with big square pillows in cases with wide ruffles around four sides. Inklings that old iron beds were due for a comeback have been in the air for some time. Sometimes they're painted in a pastel color, and sometimes in gold or silver. So rescue that old number in your family attic, if you have a family attic. And more of us have them than you might imagine.

In addition to the more spectacular exhibitions of bedrooms, they're showing plenty of those graciously comfortable rooms we all know and love. Furnished mostly with the American and English traditional furniture that we like best, these rooms are refreshed in crisp modern ways, with scintillating colors, new textures, contemporary accents. These new versions of old rooms suggest many ideas for using the most enduring styles of furniture in decorative interpretations that make them belong very much to today.

Upholstered beds are taking the center of the stage once more. These range all the way from elaborate satin-tufted numbers reminiscent of Lillian Russell to sleek leather-covered headboards with a Noel Coward accent. Not to mention a smartly scrolled bed in sapphire blue and white, said to have been a replica of the Duchess of Windsor's bed in her French home. The most effective recipe for making over an old bed is to cover the headboard with padding, then either slip cover or upholster it. Or if you want to be very swish, indeed, mirror the headboard!

Germs Dislike Paint

The New York Department of Health found paint so effective in fighting disease germs that it largely abandoned fumigation in rooms with painted walls and simply washed the painted surfaces.

Westover Hills To Get More Low-CostHomes

Mace Firm Building 300 to 400 in Addition To 150 Already Sold

By enabling home seekers to acquire detached, two-story brick homes on Federal Housing Administration terms as low as a dollar a day, Mace Properties, Inc., has paved the way for home ownership for nearly 150 families in Westover Hills since midsummer, latest figures show.

This nearby Arlington (Va.) subdivision, located on North Washington boulevard a few blocks west of Glebe road, is teeming with activity as nearly 1,000 workmen, engineers, surveyors, and road crews push forward with construction plans that call for erection of another 300 to 400 homes this year.

Featuring the "skyscraper construction" which embodies use of steel, concrete and masonry in much the same manner in which it is utilized in commercial building, this development caters exclusively to that group of home buyers able to pay only $31 to 38 monthly, yet who are used to better-than-average living quarters.

Mass Production Savings

Through mass production (the original 200 homes in Westover Hills rose simultaneously), the company is able to achieve economies in construction which permit huge savings in the ultimate cost to the purchaser, it is pointed out.

The development centers around two basic plans—a five-room-and-bath house with two bedrooms, and a six-room-and-bath house with three bedrooms. Through architectural ingenuity, however, the monotony of repetition is cleverly camouflaged by a mixture of exterior effects, giving the appearance of a blending of Colonial styles.

The houses are air conditioned with oil heat, and their full basements provide space for downstairs club room in addition to laundry facilities. Lots are wide and deep and the groupings of homes handled in such a way as to give the most advantage to each.

School Within Area

The steel girder method of construction may be inspected at first hand in the first floor joists, which with their sturdy cross-bridging, also of steel, are visible in the basement. Hardwood parquet floors are laid over a well insulated and sound-deadening base.

The new Claude A. Swanson Junior High School is within the development, its site surrounded by the homes. Other schools of every grade and denomination are within easy walking distance. The property is served by a 20-minute bus service to downtown Washington.

To inspect the exhibit home, furnished by The Hecht Co., cross Key Bridge and drive out Lee highway to Glebe road (first traffic light), and bear left on North Washington boulevard, then right to the property.

Ornamental Iron Work Gains in Popularity

Ornamental iron work has increased in popularity within the past few years to such an extent that the classical porch grilles once associated closely with New Orleans and Mobile, are now found on homes in each of the 48 States.

Many of the beautiful designs have been resurrected from the past and produced by modern methods for the low-cost home. Iron railings and other ornamental iron work may be added to existing homes.

Hand-Me-Down Pieces Litter Guest Rooms

Cast-Off Furniture Rarely Fits Where It Is Placed

By Lonore Kent

Hand-me-downs may have their place in the field of cast-off clothing. Many a child is quite happy in garments outgrown by an older brother or sister and remodeled to fit. It's different, however, with rooms. Especially guest rooms. Hand-me-down furniture is too prone to be used without any attempt to fit it to the room wherein it is placed.

At least, that's the way it was with one guest room on the second floor of a little suburban house. Everything the room held had seen a better day and had gradually found its way there from other rooms as better furniture took its place. The result was far from happy and seemed to breathe a note of inhospitality to the entering guest.

In the first place, the room was too long for its width and the sloping roof seemed to take away from any convenience of arrangement. The one window, placed in the middle of the gable wall, was flanked on either side by further ugliness. A tall chest of drawers, once part of a golden oak set of the Victorian era, occupied the wall space to the right of the window.

To the left, a motley collection of framed photographs held a sort of perpetual family reunion on the wall. These too had been removed piecemeal from various rooms of the house, and, because they could not be discarded for reason of sentimentality of respect for dead ancestry, the guest room was, so to speak, left holding the bag.

Jutting out into the room, greedily eating up precious floor space, was a large iron bed. The rest of the miscellaneous furniture which had arrived by the same process of elimination from other rooms, was entirely unrelated in color and design. A bloated blue chair, bulbous with stuffing, squatted uncomfortably in the center of the right wall, its bold center pattern staring in defiance at the antiquated sewing machine opposite.

To further the heterogeneous appearance of the room, the once dark figured wallpaper had, from too many years' faithful service, lost its original green and turned to a bilious olive. Above it, the white ceiling curved in bleak contrast. The rug was the only possession that had been bought especially for the room. An attractive shade of rose, it really became the nucleus around which the new color scheme was built.

There was, of course, only one thing to do to raise the spirits of such a room and that was to redecorate it. And to redecorate smartly nowadays is to follow the fundamental rules of paint styling. These rules, incidentally, simply entail the application of color to a room to bring out its best points and subdue its more unfavorable features.

But first, before the room was paint styled, the disfigured wall covering was removed and a smooth coating of flat paint applied in its stead. A pale misty gray was used for the side walls and a soft blue-gray for the low end walls and ceiling. While there was not a great deal of difference between the two shades, the lighter color did serve to make the walls seem farther apart and increase the apparent width of the room.

On the window wall of the room the window was transformed by a new treatment. The faded voile curtains were replaced by draperies of filmy, pale blue material. A wooden valance placed at the top edge of the window frame served to give an appearance of greater height to the too-square window.

A simple scroll design to give interest to the wall was painted in blue, shaded with touches of rose. One scroll at either side of the window and paralleling the slope of the ceiling served to tie wall, ceiling and window together in a pleasant composition of design. The arch of the ceiling, properly treated, in this way became an asset instead of a liability.

Instead of the one big bed, two single couches were placed along the wall—to the right and left of the window—and covered with spreads and bolster rolls of pale gray to match the side wall. Darker blue-gray material appliqued to form a curved border at the foot of the couch and tapering part way the length of the bed was an ingenious device to give further character to the general design.

The big chair was slip covered in rose to harmonize with the rug. Pale gray paint hid the golden oak body of the bureau and the new horizontal drawer pulls. The faces of the drawers themselves were painted in the blue-gray. One of the cleverest devices of the entire rehabilitation of the room was the deep shelf-pocket built on the inside of the closet door with mirror above it to serve as a dressing table.

Remembering the comfort of the guests, extra powder puffs, thread, facial tissues and cream were kept in readiness at all time for emergency use. And to keep company with the shaded bed lamps above the pillows, several really readable books were kept close at hand.

Science of Acoustics Another U.S. 'Discovery'

Although scientists have discovered traces of what may have been acoustical treatments in the buildings of old Rome, it was not until 1895 that the first of present-day technical studies of sound control were begun.

The study of sound in building interiors had its start in the researches of the late Prof. W. C. Sabine, of Harvard, who experimented with an acoustically faulty lecture room. The science of acoustics still relies on many of his original findings.

$12,600,000 Utility Issue Authorized

The Interstate Commerce Commission yesterday authorized the Iowa Electric Light & Power Co. to issue $12,600,000 of 3¼ per cent first mortgage bonds, series A, and $1,980,000 of General Mortgage Serial Notes.

The bonds and notes will be sold at par plus accured interest. The proceeds will be used to redeem $12,600,000 of outstanding mortgage bonds, to make additions and improvements to the company's electric utility properties, and to reimburse its treasury for expenditures made for capital purposes.

Summer Is Time To Repair Window

Sticking doors or windows usually require refitting or repair, and with the arrival of warm weather the home owner will find the ideal time to make repairs of this nature.

Doors and windows should also be checked for the following points: Doors out of plumb, requiring refitting or new hardware; advisability of replacing wood panels with glass in doors; defective locks, chains, or bolts, requiring repair or replacement; acquiring extra keys for various locks; broken or defective window cords and pulleys needing greplacement; replacing broken window latches or other window devices; cracks around window sash and doors requiring weatherstripping.

Kitchen Fixtures Can BeEconomical

The housewife who is planning to "do over" her kitchen on a limited budget should remember that if she plans wisely and buys carefully, all the efficiency and practically all of the beauty obtainable in the most expensive installations are hers, authorities say.

Modern basic appliances, refrigerator, sink and range are available at surprisingly low cost if the housewife is willing to forego a few "de luxe" features. Efficient design and sound, sturdy construction are the more important considerations, according to experts.

Cabinets and counters are available in unpainted wood in many department stores and lumber yards and, with a little ingenuity and a little paint, can be made to look as smart as porcelain-finished appliances. Remarkable advances have been made in the finish, design and layout of steel cabinets. The convenience of the design of new steel cabinets is apparent in the arrangement of well-equipped drawers and storage spaces in both base and wall cabinets.

Nova Scotia Workers Build Own Homes

Government, Schools, Churches Cooperate; Pay $9 a Month

"Miracle houses" costing $3,000, built and occupied by workers who are not members of the building trades by vocation, are largely solving the low-cost housing problems in towns and rural areas throughout Nova Scotia, Professor S. H. Prince of Dalhousie University, chairman of the Nova Scotia Housing Commission, declared at the Columbia University summer session.

The homes, no two of which are alike, have received the name "miracle houses" because of the great contrast between the new buildings and the old rented quarters hitherto lived in by workers, according to Professor Prince, who spoke at a recent symposium on housing and education in New York.

"The magic formula which has made possible the building of these dwellings, which can be paid for at $9 a month, is a new form of institutional cooperation participated in by the state, educational institutions and churches," Professor Prince explained, in part.

Free Instruction Given

Taking part in the housing program are miners and rural workers from regions around Reserve Mines, Dominion, Glace Bay, and Whitney Pier, in Nova Scotia. The government, Professor Prince said, furnishes various communities with low interest loans, legal aid, blue prints, architectural advice and trained construction men, such as carpenters and plumbers.

Schools in communities which have shown interest in participating in the housing program cooperate by offering instruction in the principles of home construction. After from six to eight months of training, workers who have been attending classes begin building homes—mostly two-story frame houses—under expert supervision. Churches have cooperated in many instances by turning over to the workers land which would otherwise remain unused.

"The significance of the Nova Scotia Housing Plan lies in the stress it places on the building of communities, rather than merely on the construction of homes," Professor Prince added. "Authorities today recognize that there can be no ideal home apart from a model community into which it is designed to fit. The outstanding feature of the program is the proof which it furnishes that workers who are not carpenters or plumbers can, under adequate direction, erect suitable dwellings.

A field lot of ample proportions adjoins each site, thus making possible light agriculture, while parkways either have been or will be eventually constructed through the developments, which are usually built on the outskirts of villages.

War Brings Lull

"The department of agriculture of the province cooperates by directing beautification schemes, including the planting of trees and hedges, and the department of highways is responsible for the construction of roads in the development and highways to nearby points.

"Although none of the new homes is palatial, still they are usually far better than the company houses owned by the mines throughout the region. Furthermore, while the workers, who devote their own time to the building of the houses, have to pay around $10 a month to rent a company house, they can buy a 'miracle house' at around $9 a month.

"A lull in the development of housing schemes is inevitable because of the war, since government money is needed for other purposes, but a new and livelier interest in housing progress is bound to spring up in the next post-war era. It can be safely said that the success of the housing programs in England is to a great extent responsible for the high morale of its people today.

"The new developments in Nova Scotia have been largely restricted to rural areas where the type of workers live in one locality for a industry present tends to make long period of time. In the larger cities the problem of housing is being attacked from the viewpoint of furnishing low rents, thereby leaving the workers free from the restrictions of home owners and able to move to new communities where work is to be found."

18th Century Motif Pervades Shadybrook

Exclusiveness Keynote Of Development Based On Old Georgetown

An old Georgetown motif has been revised for luxurious living in houses of the Shadybrook group, now presented through a Washington Post Display Home, at 5029 V street northwest. Exclusiveness is the keynote of this new development of Edward R. Carr, realtor and builder. The architectural design is based on the fine Georgetown dwellings of the eighteenth century.

The presentation residence furnished with antitques by Sarah Willoughby Moody, may be visited by the following route: Out Q street northwest, in Georgetown, then nne block to Reservoir road, left on Reservoir road, and continue across Conduit road one block to the community.

The project has been constructed to please those home seekers wanting an environment of early American charm and in the operation Mr. Carr has made possible homes with beauty of the past coupled with comforts of the present.

Into his houses following the stately architecture of the foregoing century, he has incorporated such up-to-date conveniences as air-conditioning, automatic heating and full insulation. These items of modern equipment have been embodied into structures containing typical features of colonial times such as random-width planked floors, quaint built-in corner cabinets, broad and welcoming fireplaces. Exteriors are graced with delightfully terraced private gardens and woven fences characteristic of Georgetown houses of other days.

Mr. Carr has six homes to present in the group and their prices range from $7,950 to $8,750. The dwellings are authentic reproductions of Georgetown Colonial type homes, each built in accordance with the handsome styling of the period and conforming rigidly to the decorative motif of that time.

Each of the homes contain six rooms, two baths and brick garage. Their sites adjoin the route of the Chesapeake & Ohio restoration project and the entrance to the development, on Reservoir road, is immediately opposite an ancient mansion called Whitehaven, erected in 1751.

Swinging Door Just Matter of Proper Hinge

In many houses the door between the kitchen and dining room, or butler's pantry and dining room, is still of the old-fashioned single-action type. It is a simple matter to install a swinging door with a double-acting floor hinge, thus obviating the necessity of balancing the roast on one knee while you reach for the door knob.

When you make the change, don't be too economical when you buy the hinge—it is a complicated mechanism and must be of good stuff to last.

Miglioretti Firm Expands

Miglioretti Bros., of Baltimore and Washington, have announced decision to enter the Virginia market. This firm is one of the largest wineries in the East and has reported steady success both in Maryland and the District of Columbia. The management of the Virginia business will be under F. T. Lamarca who has been connected with the firm for the past six years. The firm which entered business in Baltimore, in 1915, has been selling imported foods to Washington trade since 1925, and wines since repeal.

Louis and James Miglioretti, partners in the firm, are descendants of the founders of Miglioretti Vineyards in the Old World which have been producing European wines for several centuries. These partners have learned phases of the wine business handed down through generations from father to son.

Mr. Hoffenberg's resignation from his position as account executive with the Henry J. Kaufman Advertising Agency of Washington and Baltimore, took effect August 15, at which time he moved to his new headquarters at 1227 G street northwest.

Two More Groups of Homes Being Built in Yates Gardens

Ground has been broken and construction plans proceeding for two more groups of unique homes in Yates Gardens, Alexandria, Va., where the early charm of that historic city's quaint old architecture is being faithfully recreated, it was announced yesterday by Edward R. Carr, realtor and builder.

The property is located at Pitt, Franklin and Jefferson streets, a block from the Mount Vernon Memorial boulevard. The new group of homes will include two and three bedroom types, some of them with two baths.

The exhibit home on Jefferson street, furnished in antiques by Helen McLaughlin and decorated in keeping with its traditional style by Joan Haley, has attracted throngs of interested visitors during the few weeks since it first was opened to the public.

Designed by Louis R. Moss and built by Yates Gardens, Inc., the distictive colonial type homes present an entirely new departure in modern house building, in that they blend every detail of tradition architecture, as found in early examples, with such modern-day conveniences as air conditioning, automatic heat, etc.

Typical of the unusual features is the random width, plank flooring throughout; the faithfully reproduced fireplaces, the quaint walled gardens; the dining rooms on ground levels with flagstone terraces adjoining.

Stocks Steady, War Tension Lifts Slightly

Turnover Restrained As Traders Seek to Gauge War News

By the Associated Press

New York, Aug. 17.—War tension lessened a trifle in today's stock market and leading issues steadied after a week of generally sharp declines.

While a handful of favorites managed to get up a point or so, recoveries weer limited ot minor fractions in most cases, and, at the close, declines were almost as plentiful as gains. Numerous stocks finished at their final levels of Friday.

The Associated Press average of 60 shares was up .1 of a point, at 41.1, but on the week showed a net drop of 1.9 points, largest weekly decrease in nearly three months. Narrowness of the day's proceedings was exemplified by the fact that of 1,233 listed issues, only 334 appeared o nthe ticker tape. Of these 120 were up, 93 down and 121 unchanged.

Turnover Dwindles

The turnover for the two hours of 106,700 shares compared with 180,260 last Saturday, and, with the exception of July 27, was the lowest aggregate for any session since August 3, 1918. The volume in the bond department was the smallest since 1917.

Stocks given a modest lift included U. S. Steel, Bethlehem, Chrysler, General Motors, duPont, Westinghouse, Standard Oil of New Jersey, Anaconda, American Smelting, Sears Roebuck, Montgomery Ward, United Aircraft, Consolidated Edison, New York Central, Southern Pacific and General Electric.

Down a bit were Eastman Kodak, International Nickel, Youngstown Sheet, Woolworth and Sperry.

Traders still were disinclined to step out very far on hte buying side, brokers said, because of their inability to gauge the course of the Anglo-German conflict. Persistence of the Nazi air blasts at England, declaration of a complete German embargo of the British Isles and reported Italian victories in Africa served to restrain those with bullish leanings. Aat that, some in financial quarters retained the hope that John Bull, after resisting strongly in seven days of the greatest aerial battle in history, would eventually repel the Hitler smash.

Steel Rate to Rebound

Encouraging marketwise were forecasts of a rebound in next week's steel mill operations, a swift climb i nautomobile production, broadening demand for copper, expansion of department store sales throughout the country and the general opinion industry would soon respond to huge spending for rearmament. Delays in working out hte national tax program clouded hte business picture to some extent.

In a sleepy curb minor plus signs were posted for Electric Bond & Share, American Cyanamid "B" and E. W. Bliss. American Gas and Phoenix securities were slightly lower. Sales here approximated 22,000 shares against 34,000 a week ago.

Stocks marked time Monday, then fell out of bed Tuesday for their worst bump since May 21, when waves of German bombers swept over England. Offerings dried up Wednesday, but minor declines were well distributed. There was a mild comeback Thursday when the thought began to seep through boardrooms that maybe the Fuehrer had met his match. Intensification of the warfare in the skies resulted in another relapse Friday without bringing out any great amount of stock.

Attempts to Smear Industry On 'War Profits' Called Unjust

By Merryle S. Rukeyser
Economic Commentator.

Beyond the Fifth Column, there is a Sixth Column consisting of well-beaning mudlers who can't add. These Sixth Columnists confuse words and theories with realities, and mudy the waters of public policy with demogogic proposals. They are the unwitting deadly enemies of democracy because they weaken popular goernment with the poison of misconceptions and fallacies.

Mr. Rukeyser

Where a person knowingly preaches a doctrine which seems plausible but is untrue, he is a demagogue.

Where a person knowingly is untrue, he is a demagogue.

But when, through sheer ignorance and incompetance, a bungler confuses popular thinking, he belongs in what might be called the Sixth Column.

As a protective device against Sixth Columnists, improved national, or social bookkeeping is indicated. Simple arithmetic in double entry form is free of emotional bias and class hatred.

Yet responsible industry only wants Congress to enact into law the formula which the White House approved on July 10 last after conference with the principal financial advisors.

Such an attempt to smear industry seems especially unjust since organized business through its national associations last autumn took the leadership in organizing popular opinion to keep the United States out of the war.

Apart from humanitarian aspects, sober men of industry know that war is the human race's greatest extravagace. They realize that war negates the madern effort to achieve better living for all the people.

Thoughtful men of industry know also that war profits are transient and illusory, and are in time vitiated by post-war deflation and higher taxation. Moreover, war brings in its wake a prolonged chain of circumstances which upsets the normal equilibrium which brings prosperity in a highly organized economic world under the power age.

Real prosperity hinges on healthy and balanced conditions, which encourage the maximum uninterupted flow of goods and services from maker to user. War imposes barriers and interruptions which impede economic wellbeing.

Maybe the economic illiterate would understand this problem of obolescence and depreciation better if the Government built and owned the war plants, and paid private industry a fee for managing them.

...If the plants are to be privately. .owned, then the confusion springs. .from misuse of the word, "profit,". .which has a Marxian connota-. .tion. .What is commonly called. .profit is in reality an element of. .cost of goods produced, namely,. .the cost of capital, or savings. .invested in tools and other re-. .sources. ....

The so-called profit could more acurately be described as a payment for the use of tools. o authentic payment for tools is made until proper writ-offs have been made for depreciation and obolescence, which reflects the wearing out and going out of fashion of tools and other assets.

Business Highlights

Prepared by Standard Statistics Co.

Car Registrations

Registrations of new passenger cars in the United States in June came to 318,615, moderately under the May total, but 74,874 (30 per cent) above that for June, 1939. The cumulative increase for the first six months was 28.9 per cent, compared with about 28.6 per cent for the first five. From now on registrations will be influenced to a considerable extent by knowledge that the new models will be along shortly, and in some instances by dealer shortage of 1940 cars. Last year the low for registrations came in September (141,633 units), with the trend thereafter, notwithstanding the Chrysler strike, uninterruptedly upward to 260,216 for January, 1940. Much the same course will probably be followed this year.

Steel Inventories

One of the big uncertainties in the general industrial outlook hinges on the question of whether steel operations can be maintained at present rates. Sizable orders are still being placed, and the industry has built up an impressive backlog against which to work. However, indications are that production is exceeding actual consumption by a substantial margin, and steel inventories now are believed to be the highest in years. It will require good demand on the part of the automobile industry, a near-term pick up in takings for rearmament work, continued heavy shipments to Britain, and general adherence to the policy of maintaining sizable inventories here at home to keep the situation healthy.

Lead Prices

The latest reduction in lead prices, to 4.60 cents a pound East St. Louis, probably was mainly a tactical move. During mid-July it was revealed that Mexican lead was being sold at 4⅝ cents, duty paid at the Mexican border, and it is likely that the threat or actuality of increased imports from this quarter was a big factor in the decision to reduce the domestic price. Certainly there is nothing in the statistical position of the United States industry which may be counted as threatening, and while demand during the recent past has been disappointing, there will be little danger of any permanent slump as long as general business maintains its current pace.

Railroads Immune

The vast body of railroad bonds and stocks, including defaulted bonds and guaranteed stocks, will be immune to the excess profits tax threat if the Ways and Mean subcommittee's proposals become law. Only the strongest roads are in danger of paying excess profits taxes on 1940 earnings, and in none of these cases would the payment of such taxes reduce fixed charge coverage enough to have any appreciable effect on bond values. Present stock prices, too, are so moderate in relation to earnings that no great change in market position on the stocks involved is suggested, although the possibility that up to 40 per cent of any additional net would be taken by the Government could serve to limit appreciation possibilities.

Investment Companies

Leading investment companies had almost 10 per cent of their net assets in cash or Government bonds at the end of the second quarter. That compares with the 7 per cent or so at which their cash ratio had stayed since the end of 1938, and indicates that the group was a little less optimistic about stock prices in the June quarter than at any time in the last two years. Moreover, the fairly pronounced changes in individual companies' holdings, taken in conjunction with the respective companies' past records, indicates that the market judgment of the sellers deserves more respect than that of the buyers.

Oil Burner Industry

New orders for domestic oil burners in June came to 19,672, or about 10 per cent more than in the like month last year. The increase in the first half was about 23 per cent. Shipments in June totaled 18,387, a gain of 8.8 per cent as compared with June, 1939, while the six months' increase was approximately 26 per cent. This narrowing in the rate of improvement over last year probably will continue through much of the current quarter. Although July shipments last year were only nominally above those of June, the rise in August and September was considerably greater than seasonal.

Capital Goods Orders

Standard's index of new orders for capital goods showed no increase in July, as compared with June. This development undoubtedly reflects the fact that heavy orders were placed when the expanded armament program was announced in June, merely as a matter of protection against the possibility of delayed deliveries. The failure of new orders to expand further is one reason for expecting no substantial increase in capital goods production during the near future. However, it should be recognized that operations in the heavy industries already are at high levels, and it will require an appreciable addition to plant capacity before the capital goods lines can show a marked expansion in output.

$65,000,000 Arms Projects Listed in Week

Hailed As Indication That Defense Program Is Starting to Roll

By the Associated Press

New York, Aug. 17.—Expanding war industry assumed a larger place in the Nation's business picture today as plans for new factories to make aircraft, powder, tanks and other fighting equipment moved out of the blueprint stage.

Announcements of several big projects the last few days were hailed in financial circles as indication plant enlargement under the $10,000,000,000 defense program really was getting started.

Included were $20,000,000 for a new Douglas Aircraft factory in southern California, a $20,000,000 tank factory in the Detroit area and a $25,000,000 powder plant near Radford, Va.

Expenditures of hundreds of millions of dollars for new plants both with RFC and private funds, promise to give stout support to business generally during the autumn and winter months, analysts said.

Will Offset Other Losses

Acceleration of defense spending, some argued, may save industry from a severe setback in event the German aerial assault on England and attempted sea blockade curtails trade with the British Isles.

Partly in fear of this possibility, it seemed, Wall street security and commodity markets were depressed when the air attack on British industrial and military nerve centers was stepped up this week. Some farm staples, cut off from erstwhile European users and threatened with further loss of markets, sold at the lowest prices of the war period.

More than $1,000,000,000 in British orders in this country, mostly for aircraft, steel and mechanical equipment, were estimated to be undelivered.

Hesitation in new buying, according to trade reports, was particularly noticeable in wholesale markets for textiles and merchandise for civilian needs. Sentiment among dealers was said to have been influenced by the sag in commodities and selling in Wall street.

In Washington, on the other hand, defense plans made speed.

Building Is Pushed

Confident Uncle Sam's demands would keep the industry going full blast for a long time to come, aircraft manufacturers expedited plans for most factories without waiting Congressional approval of tax changes intended to encourage capital outlay in the armament field.

The Wall Street Journal said the aircraft industry was about ready to begin $150,000,000 of new construction.

Awarding of Government contracts for naval bases, shipyard and airport facilities previously contributed to make it the busiest summer construction engineers have seen in ten years.

Building observers said it appeared the activity would continue at a high level through the remaining months of 1940. Supplementing Government-financed projects, they noted, was a recent upturn in private capital outlays, including heavier equipment spending by railroads.

As projects go into actual construction, it was pointed out payrolls and jobs may be expected to increase in many communities.

Complaints of skilled labor shortages continued to be heard as result of absorption of manpower into shipbuilding, aircraft, tool and allied industries stmiulated by British and United States armament orders.

But a large reservoir of workmen still was available, judging by various estimates of unemployment.

Auto Output Picks Up

Motor centers felt a late summer pickup in activity when manufacturers swung into production of 1941 models. Assemblies were estimated at 20,475 units this week compared with 11,635 the previous week and 15,105 in the like week a year ago.

The motor industry was expected to raise assembly schedules further in the next few weeks.

In textile manufacturing, accumulation of orders for Navy and Army needs set many mills running at full speed in spite of the cautious mood of private dealers. How much the prospective draft of young men into the military forces had to do with the buying slack was hard to figure but wholesalers counted it as a factor, at least.

After rising from 60 per cent of capacity to above 90 from April to early August, steel production slowd a bit.

The Week in Industry

New York, Aug. 17 (AP).—The Associated Press index of industrial activity continued to creep upward this week, reaching a new high for the spring and summer recovery. The index, which is adjusted for seasonal variations, rose to 107.8 from 107.5 the previous week.

Components of the index compare as follows:

	Latest Wk.	Prev. Wk.	Year Ago
Auto production	89.0	88.0	75.6
Steel mill activity	120.1	121.5	83.4
Cotton manufactuer activity	125.0	123.5	121.2
Electric power production	131.3	132.5	120.7

Wheat Rallies; Cotton Slumps On Blockade

Grain Traders Remain Skittish on War News; Corn Holds Steady

By the Associated Press

The wheat market caught its balance yesterday after Friday's severe break but traders were still skittish as they pored over war news.

In the Chicago futures market the grain advanced ⅝ to ⅞ cent a bushel. Corn ended unchanged to ¼ up. Buying attracted by yesterday's break was the main support.

German announcement of complete blockade of England undermined the New York cotton futures market and prices dropped 15 to 25 cents a bale. The better showing of grains and securities apparently prevented a more severe spill.

Hog and cattle prices at Chicago were maintained at the top of the week's advance but few sales were made because of scarcity of stock.

The Associated Press weighted index of 35 wholesale spot commodities, based on 1926 as 100, inched up to 69.04 from 69.03 Friday.

Middle West Corp Net in Quarter Rises to $822,120

Middle West Corporation, utility holding concern, reported for the quarter ended June 30 net profit of $822,120 or 25 cents a common share, compared with $728,433 or 22 cents a share in the like period of 1939.

Hudson Motor Car Co.

Hudson Motor Car Co. and subsidiaries today reported for the June 30 quarter net loss of 0965,954 after charges and taxes, compared with net loss of $876,891 in the comparable 1939 quarter.

American M. & F. Co.

American Machine & Foundry Co. reported net profit for six months ended June 30 of $580,625, including dividends received from International Cigar Machinery Co. (a subsidiary), but exclusive of proportionate earnings of International Cigar Machinery Co. not declared as dividends. This equaled 58 cents a capital share. In the first half last year the company and subsidiaries earned $315,084, after a deduction of nonrecurring charges of $161,900, equal to 31 cents a share.

Chicago Great Western

The Chicago Great Western Railroad reported net loss for the month of June of $132,366 as compared with $63,960 for the corresponding month a year ago.

Net loss for the six months ended June 30 was $607,497 as compared with $547,576 for the corresponding 1939 period.

Excess Profits Tax Less Than Expected

The excess-profits tax, as reported to the House committee, is considerably less harsh than generally expected. It is officially estimated that the proposed schedule will raise $300,000,000 on 1940 corporate profits, whereas the original schedule had indicated a yield of $700,000,000. Corporate profits for 1940 will run in the neighborhood of $9,000,000,000. Thus a yield of $300,000,000 would mean an effective rate of about 3½ per cent. But since the flat $5,000 credit will exempt almost 90 per cent of the taxpaying corporations in the country, the remainder will pay a higher average rate. During the World War the combined war and excess-profits taxes worked out to an effective rate of 15 per cent in 1917, 30 per cent in 1918, and 15 per cent in 1919.

Farm Income Climb Exceeds Seasonal Norm

U. S. Bureau Expects Continued Advance Through August

By the Associated Press

Farm income increased more than seasonally in July, the Bureau of Agricultural Economics reported yesterday, because of a substantial gain in grain movement and somewhat better prices for livestock and dairy products.

"A further rise in income of approximately seasonal proportions is expected in August," the bureau said.

The bureau predicted that, barring an early end to the war in Europe, domestic business conditions affecting consumer demand for farm products would continue for several months around recent improved levels.

The bureau said industrial production in July held "at the high level attained in June, and there was further substantial improveme ntin industrial employment and pay rolls."

"Any decline in domestic industrial activity and industrial workers," the bureau said, "which might follow an early end to the war in Europe would depend in larger measure on the effect that the change in conditions would have on inventory policies.

"If the attendant uncertainty caused businessmen generally to postpone and cancel orders, a temporary drop of sharp proportions might ensue. The actual loss of export business would be a relatively minor matter, since many British orders for military supplies would be taken over for our own defense program."

Pointing out that continental European markets were closed and the United Kingdom had restricted imports to urgent needs and was obtaining them as far as possible from empire sources, the bureau said that at least as long as the war continued export sales of surplus farm commodities would be in "very limited" amounts.

Pan-American Trailways Takes Over Bus Line

By the Associated Press

Charlottesville, Va., Aug. 17.—Pan-American Trailways, Inc., a Virginia corporation, has taken over operation of the Pan American Bus Line of North Carolina between New York and Miami, Fla.

The new company is controlled by officers of the Virginia Stage Lines and the Safeway Trails. Officers are Claude A. Jessup, Charlottesville, president; C. P. Schenbly, Washington, vice president, and S. A. Jessup, Charlottesville, secretary-treasurer. Schnebly and C. A. Jessup will have management of the new concern.

Pan-American Trailways plans for an expansion which will include additional schedules and immediate improvement and replacement of present equipment with the latest type equipment available. These improvements will also include terminal facilities along the entire route. Between New York and Washington, the Safeway Trails terminals will be used, while in Virginia, facilities of the Virginia Trailways will be utillized.

U. S. Investments Retired

The Federal Home Loan Bank Board announced yesterday that savings and loan associations have retired more than $17,000,000 of Government investments since June 30, although less than $1,000,000 was due.

"The flow of private investments into associations throughout the country, making available ample private capital for the building of homes, enabled them to repurchase $7,402,000 worth of shares from the U. S. Treasury and $9,717,000 from the Home Owners Loan Corporation," the announcement said.

It was also asserted that assets of the thrift and home-financing institutions of the Federal Home Loan Bank system increased $145,000,000 during the quarter closing June 30.

Curtis Publishing Plan Is Approved

Philadelphia, Aug. 17 (AP).—The Curtis Publishing Co. announced yesterday its recapitalization plan, approved by stockholders July 2, was declared operative at a director's meeting yesterday after "a substantial amount" of consents had been recevied from stockholders to exchange present stock for the new prior preferred.

The deadline for the exchange was set as September 30. The company announced the new securities will be delivered about October 1.

The plan provided for exchange of each share of present preferred stock for a 15-year $10 principal amount 3 per cent debenture, two and a half shares of common stock and a share of new prior preferred stock, with a cumulative dividend of $3 per year and an additional dividend of $1 per annum payable and cumulative to the extent earned.

U. S. to Cooperate In Rubber Program

The recent publication by the Department of Commerce of the full terms of the rubber-purchase agreement indicates that the governmental agency and the rubber fabricating concerns will cooperate closely in their purchasing policies to facilitate building up the necessary emergency crude-rubber reserve. The international regulation committee is encouraging rubber producers to be ready sellers of crude at prices around 18 to 20 cents a pound, and the Rubber Reserve Co. has stated that it will try to arrange its purchases so as to maintain prices within this range.

Commodity Review

New York, Aug. 17 (AP).—Farm products sank to the lowest levels this week since war struck Europe last September, the Associated Press commodity index disclosed.

The index, based on 1926 as 100, dropped to 69.03 from 69.54 last week for the seventh consecutive recession. A year ago the measure, composed of 35 wholesale commodities and adjusted for seasonal and long-term trend, stood at 64.02.

Key industrial materials made a better showing than foodstuffs as the Nation's industrial machine whirred at a faster pace.

Analysts cited as factors in the decline in food's war-blocked export outlets and huge surpluses of some important crops.

Raw sugar sold at the lowest price since 1932 and only a shade above the record low set in May that year.

Wheat careened down the price scale while dealers nervously pondered possible repercussions of the furious attack on Ottawa. Corn, oats and rye followed suit.

Cotton slipped as Southern spot dealers reported laggard demand.

Coffee broke into the lowest price territory on record. Wool and tin declined in the face of prospective big Government orders.

Other staples lower included linseed oil, cocoa, flour, butter and lambs.

Rubber, the exception to the trend, influenced by the price range set by the Government in a program to build up reserve stocks.

Steel sold at the highest price since October. Small receipts and good consumer demand for pork cuts buoyed quotations.

Zinc and hides advanced, along with coal, turpentine, eggs and cattle.

Analysts of the index follows:

	Aug. 16	Prev. week	Year ago
28 commodities	*69.03	69.54	64.02
Industrials	68.53	68.34	79.20
Food	*67.34	68.06	47.09
Livestock	73.67	72.07	65.86
Grains and cotton	*61.69	64.58	55.63
Textile	58.11	58.35	56.29
Nonferrous metal	77.03	76.97	73.72

Metal Review

New York, Aug. 17 (AP).—Nonferrous metal markets took a bolder stand this week after the lagging demand and price reductions in copper and lead last week.

While copper was unchanged at 10¾ cents a pound in the custom smelter market and 11 cents in producing quarters, a stronger undertone developed and there were hints from dealers the sag might be closed.

The Copper Institute July statistical report showed domestic consumption at the best rate since last January. Copper stocks increased but refined metal on hand at the end of July was equal to less than 3 months supply at the July shipment rate.

Zinc advanced ¼ cent to 6½ cents a pound East St. Louis after a period of active shipments and good demand. Brisk buying continued despite the boost.

Users of lead, attracted by last week's cut, came to market for increasing amounts of metal. The price held firm at 4.75-4.80 cents a pound.

Steel circles reported a pickup in orders from domestic interests. Automobile companies came into the market for larger tonnages and railroads placed more business. Steel scrap firmed and gave a better tone to the general steel market.

White Paint Dresses Up Old Furniture

Victorian Pieces Given New Charm by Modern Treatment

By Lynn Hardesty

New York.—What can be done with Victorian furniture? Clutter up the attic or being apologized for in the spare bedroom, these dark heavy walnut pieces have been depressing to many modern-minded home makers. Interior decorators here are solving the problem in a very direct way.

The thing to do, it seems, is simply to paint them white. Such reconditioned Victorian pieces are being pointed out with pride in many a fashionable New York decorator's shop and are being sold for no inconsiderable sums to wealthy Park avenue apartment house dwellers.

It all began with the discovery that one or two white-painted pieces gave a smart accent to almost any room. One of those low-seated walnut chairs, originally covered with black horsehair, receives a coat of flat white or very light gray paint and is reupholstered with dull pink velvet. Behold a charming slipper chair for a bedroom! Victorian sofas—even those with all the extravagances of carved wood thought so elegant in grandmother's day—are painted white and given a covering of soft velvet, rose or mauve. The carved wood details, no longer insistent and pretentious, are even charming!

A pair of old-fashioned arm chairs make picturesque and comfortable hearth seats when given an enlivening coat of white paint with a gay floral chintz covering. In this guise any room might be proud of them.

Victorians had many small stands, some with intricately carved supports. Painted, these are excellent for bedside use. In the living room they can be used to good advantage to hold lamps and books near father or mother's easy chair.

DODGE—1934 De

Zestful Mary Martin is just 'plain folksy' whether she's in Hollywood or in her home town.

HEDDA HOPPER

Hollywood, Aug. 17.—So you like taking a look at my mail, eh? Sort of like going into a grab bag and having fun with what comes out? Well, having an angelic disposition and a desire to please, I'll give you some more of your own medicine. Here it is!

CLAUDETTE COLBERT

Mary Haines, of Atlantic City, who used to play extra parts in theatrical productions of that city, has seen the rise of some of our brightest stars. She writes, "Atlantic City isn't the same since the passing of the Ziegfeld 'Follies,' 'Scandals,' Earl Carroll revues, and the big Shubert shows—alas, now we miss them all. I once saw Dolores and Helene Costello in a little specialty dance, chaperoned by their mother; Claudette Colbert with Walter Huston in 'The Barker,' and I remember as far back as Doug Fairbanks, sr., in 'The Cub' at the old Savoy Theater. He was a beginner then. Could not remember his lines, but kept busy doing athletic stunts on everything he could grab hold of. We rehearsed all day until time for curtain. No one knew his part, manager thought the show would flop, but strange to say, it went over great. I am an old lady now, but still love the bright lights and Main street." And who doesn't? Why, Mrs. John Drew's greatest thrill, right up to the time of her death, was being taken for a taxi ride up and down Broadway. She loved the sights, sounds, and signs.

No "Maybe" About It

You may have thought I was kidding when I told you recently that fans were clamoring to see Kay Francis and Walter Pidgeon teamed again, since "It's A Date," but listen to what Susan Garrison says: "If Joe Pasternak misses the chance to team Walter with Kay Francis, I hope some green witch sprinkles cracker crumbs in his bed every night until he repents."

Bodil Ann Rosing, whom you saw in "Mortal Storm," is one person who's getting a kick out of her job this summer. She is official hostess for the Danish Pavillion at the San Francisco Fair, and says, "Three times a week I give readings of Hans Christian Andersen's fairy tales. And you'd be surprised at the delight of my grown-up audiences. There is a trend nowadays towards childhood memories—perhaps because so many have forgotten what it means to be carefree and contented. I wear a Danish peasant costume, meet and talk to a hundred people a day. It's strenuous but interesting."

Here's one from Cal Cohen, veteran trouper and great friend of Mickey Rooney, who says: "No better one on earth than Mickey. When I was taken down sick in one of his pictures, he heard of my illness, and, though I had never met him before, he came to my rescue and took care of me." Mr. Cohen, who was born in 1858 and can remember Lee's surrender to Grant, also Lincoln's death, has written many poems and songs, and I hear that he and Mickey have had some lively sessions over Mickey's compositions.

Just the Half of It

Louis Baker, a high school boy who signs himself "a loyal fan and autograph chaser," writes about the difficulties of his chosen hobby; "Most stars, I guess, just think we're there automatically when they come out from a preview or premiere, but we're not. Sometimes we come from miles away and hours ahead of time." Louis describes his disappointment at being stopped by a policeman from getting Bette Davis' autograph at the premiere of "All This and Heaven Too," and ends with: "A good autograph hound never gives up! Never! But please, Miss Hedda, won't you say something for us some time in your column—something that will get us more consideration from the police and theater managers, who shoo us away even from some stars who want to sign?"

Now, Louis, there are lots of angles to this which no doubt you've never thought about. Paying patrons dislike being crowded into a corner as though they were in a bargain basement, and theater owners have to consider their customers always. Then, some stars won't go to previews or openings—they have a phobia about crowds. But just keep on trying, and you'll get those you want.

Bert Baram has an idea: "Ever since talkies came in, I've thought it would be a grand idea if 'Smellies' would be introduced. Just think—when there is a scene in a picture showing a good steak sizzling over a fire, if we could also smell it, wouldn't our mouths water! And the cafe next door would do a land-office business. And when the ravishing beauty atomizes herself with a heavenly perfume just before her date with a 'big moment,' what a glorious whiff would come to our nostrils! And when lovers hike up the old trail in the wild woods, if we could only smell the pines, or that lazy autumn oak smell! Boy, oh, boy! How awful, though when the garbage is carried out! And if we got too many smells, movie houses would have to turn on the fans and 'ray for air conditioning. Anyhow it's an idea." It certainly is, but life at the movies is complicated enough these days—what with dishes, bathing suits, and bingo, in addition to the picture.

He Is Different

Charles A. Hargraves, of Chicago, is all upset because he thinks that the movies, instead of not having enough "trimming," have too much: "Music is fine, but There is time and place for everything.' First of all, let us take these so-called directors who know nothing of time and place, and put them of commission. For instance, this canned music for a hospital scene, a house on fire, seashore, driving through the country, a fugitive swimming to safety, doctors operating, horse races and many others too numerous to mention. Do these directors think the public are idiots? They'd better get onto themselves so business can pick up." And yet I've always thought music soothed the savage breast!

Carol Kennison, a high-school girl of Westboro, Mass., comments on

Mary Martin Wins Hollywood's Heart Because Success Hasn't Changed Her

By Lucie Neville.

Hollywood, Aug. 17.—The biggest compliment that her hometown can pay Mary Martin is to say that Hollywood hasn't changed her. Of course, she has to talk kind of Yankee for pictures, and the movie people have made her hair a shade lighter, but that's about all.

Hollywood itself, accustomed to the capriciousness of suddenly successful cuties, is just as pleased, and considerably surprised, that it hasn't changed Miss Martin. After all, the girl who wowed Broadway with "My Heart Belongs to Daddy" is now an acknowledged screen star.

"Victor Herbert," her first movie, established her as the best new bet in filmusicals. "Rhythm on the River" promises to place her near the top as a comedienne. Paramount bought "Kiss the Boys Good-bye" especially for Miss Martin, paid $50,000 for it. Movietown expected to spoil her.

Instead, it calls her a swell kid. Laughs at the completely natural things she does, teases her about her Texas accent and hangs around her like an infatuated puppy. It likes her because she pays every male the compliment of flirting with him, clowns between scenes, hollers to people to come over and gossip. She talks about her 8-year-old son, lunches as often as she can with her new husband, brags about her home town (Weatherford, Texas, population 4,912), and doesn't try to forget the fact that her success started with a strip-tease on Broadway.

Always the Same

Hollywood likes her because she seems completely unconscious that she is a star. Typical was a recent hat-buying session, which started with only Miss Martin, her secretary and a saleswoman. It ended with nine more people crowded into the studio bungalow: a woman friend from New York, Patricia Morison and her brother, two admiring little girls from the "Rhythm on the River" cast, a leading man, Story Editor Richard Halliday (Miss Martin's husband) and a couple whom none of them seemed to know.

The females tried on hats; the men stood around and made smart cracks. Halliday vetoed one bonnet because his wife didn't have an appropriate dress for it and Miss Martin argued, "Hell's far, darlin'! I can get a dress for it! Lemme have it. Can I, huh, please?" and wound her arms around his neck. She got the hat.

Then, refusing to be parted for one minute from a watermelon-pink felt she had bought, she wore it to lunch, counting the compliments shouted at her along the way. Took her about 10 minutes to get settled at a cafe table, because she knew everybody in the place and stopped to talk.

She made the same sort of entry when she went back to Weatherford for the opening of "Victor Herbert"—walked down the aisle of the theater on her way to the stage to sing, greeting old friends right and left.

What Hollywood doesn't realize is that Mary Martin always has been admired and encouraged, always had more friends than she could count.

She credits a junior college dramatics teacher, Mrs. Flo Hutcheson, with her success; remembers that the night after the class play in which she appeared, Mrs. Hutcheson said the same things that Hollywood just now is telling her—that she would be a success. Her first public appearance was at 5, when she laid an Elks' Club carnival in the sawdust with a ditty about a rainbow. Weatherford weddings and announcement parties weren't complete unless Mary warbled "I Love You Truly." No amateur show was a success without her.

Has Texas Accent

She still is generous with her voice. People continue to ask her to sing "My Heart Belongs to Daddy" and she has lost all count of the number of times she has obliged. Back in New York there were eight shows a week and innumerable benefits during the nine months' run of "Leave It to Me." Then there was her after-theater act at the Rainbow room, the radio, and finally several personal appearance tours. On every occasion Miss Martin repledged herself in song.

Her Texas accent is only thinly veneered with the affectations favored by teachers of the dray-ma. Just let her talk five minutes with a home-State visitor and whoosh goes a week's work with the diction coach. Worse yet is when a gang at some Texas ranch party decides it would be fun to telephone Mary, and 20-or-so pals gossip leisurely in turn, with a fine disregard for toll charges.

At that, she'll have to burlesque a bit when she plays in "Kiss the Boys Goodby" as the talkative flowah of the Old South who outsmarts New England smarties. Only words that really stump her now are "idea" and "for," which she turns into "eye-deah" and "far." One of the first practice sentences given her was 'Mary is merry because she's to marry," but after reading it rapidly, Miss Martin commented, "Why, that's silly! Innybody kin say 'Ma'y is ma'y because she's to ma'y.'"

She works hard at dramatics—two-hour lessons every day for weeks before a picture—but does it in comfort, lolling in the sun in a bathing suit while rehearsing lines with Coach Eda Edson. When the actress decides she has had enough, the rolls into the pool, leaving Mrs. Edson vainly shouting cues from the diving board.

Her voice coach here is Irene Humphrey, wife of Miss Martin's college singing teacher. The Humphreys, too, have learned to expect anything from their unconventional pupil. Sample was the time Miss Martin was wedging in a lesson just before a broadcast and discovered her blouse and skirt were too wrinkled to wear. Without skipping a la-lah, she started unbuttoning, skinned down to her scanties, tossed the clothes to Mrs. Humphrey, made ironing-board gestures, and kept right on singing.

The famous strip-tease that accompanies the "Daddy" song originated about as casually. The act was to be a burlesque adagio, with Miss Martin—clad bulkily in a raccoon coat, earmuffs and mittens—tossed around by five gents. But while rehearsing for the opening in an autumn heat wave, the quintet began missing its catches, and as the rhumba music got hotter and hotter, so did the act. The fur began to fly, and it ended with the pride of Weatherford peeling in a solo act which eventually panicked the populace.

Proud of Son

That's Miss Martin's version. She vows that she has yet to see a genuine burly-house strip-tease. "I didn't think there was anything scandalous about it," she said. "I always wore shorts when I taught dancing and briefer than that in some shows. But when I read the headlines the morning after the opening, I was kind of—well—bothered about how to tell my family. They kept asking what I did, so finally I got my secretary to break the news and she wrote mother: 'Mary does a kind of strip-tease in the show.'

"But the only person who ever gave me a callin'-down about it was my little boy, Larry, who was about 6 then, when mother brought him to New York. During my act, he kept sliding lower and lower in his seat, and when he came backstage he talked about everybody in the cast except me. So finally I asked, 'Didn't you like it?' And he said, 'Well—mother, do you have to take off your clothes in front of all those people?'"

Paramount didn't think a husky son would be good publicity for its warbling glamorist but Miss Martin wouldn't cooperate worth a hang—just kept telling everybody about Larry's music lessons and how he reads her press notices.

Weatherford remembers her teen-age runaway marriage with Ben Hageman, while Mary was studying voice at snooty Ward-Belmont. Remembers, too, that the couple came back to a new house, with a studio, that doting Judge Martin built across the street from his own home. They settled down with Hageman studying law with the judge, and Mary teaching dancing.

Started the Hard Way

But since dancing was something she had just sort of picked up, Miss Martin spent summers studying in Hollywood so she would have new steps and routines to teach her pupuils. Soon she had classes in two neighboring Texas towns and was singing over local radio stations. But the marriage wasn't a success and she decided to go to Hollywood and stay there.

She tested at every studio except Republic, took voice and elocution lessons, grabbed whatever entertainment jobs she could get. Even at that, the Weatherford telegraph office got used to delivering this message, collect, to Judge Martin: "Down to 30 cents. What do I do now?" The answer always was cash and advice to stay in there and pitch.

A few people in Hollywood remember her in those days when she looked like a scared young school teacher. She sang in dull little night spots, the kind always doomed to die in a week, and while Martha Raye, appearing on the same bill with her, was signed by a movie scout, Mary Martin wasn't. She was a vocalist at 85-cent table d'hote dumps, warbled without pay on minor radio programs.

Then there was a Sunday amateur night at the Trocadero and Lawrence Schwab, Broadway producer without a show, signed her. He got her an audition for the role "Leave It to Me," which June Knight was deserting for matrimony. The strip-tease was a hit and the Pride of Weatherford became the Toast of Gotham.

She knew she really had arrived when a Hollywood night club impresario flew to New York, rushed to the Rainbow Room and offered her $2,000 a week to sing at his place. He

LOUELLA PARSONS

Hollywood, Aug. 17.—Hollywood has finally awakened to the need for better theater. Dudley Murphy and Alan Mowbray, president and vice president of the Theater Guild of Southern California, are largely responsible for this new consciousness which has aroused our movie folk from their lethargy.

KATHARINE CORNELL

The guild is putting on the series of plays in "Tonight At 8:30" at the El Capitan and they are so excellent that the whole town is now clamoring for more of the same caliber. What a wonderful thing if we could have our movie favorites and the youngsters who are just starting, in stage plays all through the year. As it is now, occasionally we have Helen Hayes, Katharine Cornell, Lynn Fontanne and Alfred Lunt or Gertrude Lawrence in their Eastern successes. But only for a brief time and after long, dry stretches of inactivity in our local playhouses.

The wholesale appearances of topnotch Hollywood players such as Basil Rathbone, Constance Bennett, Brian Aherne, Herbert Marshall, Binnie Barnes, Douglas Fairbanks, jr., Rosalind Russell and many others in the current productions of "Tonight At 8:30" has given a new impetus to the Los Angeles theater. Already players are discussing the importance of sponsoring and working in a theater movement which would enable us to boast first nights such as they have in New York, glamorous premieres with fine plays and splendid actors.

Leontovich Interested

Greatly interested in the theater project is Eugenie Leontovich, stage and screen star who received her early training in the Moscow Art Theater. A brilliant, charming woman, Miss Leontovich feels we should have a permanent theater which would vie with the best efforts of New York and London she says, "Since important companies in other industries provide 'proving grounds' to test their products before selling them to the American public, why could not Hollywood, through the medium of a home theater, become the proving ground for promising actors and meritorious plays.

"Motion picture producers go to Broadway to discover new talent for their films. Many of the young players now on the climb to stardom were in Hollywood under contract to the various studios but were forced to go back to the New York stage to be 'discovered.' After this type of discovery the studio is forced to pay huge sums for the very player who could formerly have been built up for a nominal sum.

"The Hollywood of today," goes on the fascinating Eugenie, "is fast becoming the focal point of art and culture. With Hollywood the undisputed cinema center of the universe, there is no reason why Hollywood cannot become an outstanding theatrical center as well.

"Old world culture has been damaged irreparably and if it ever does spring to life again I doubt if we will ever live to see it, but America is still the land of opportunity and advancement. Americans have proven by their present attitude toward affairs abroad that they are sane, completely rational and understanding—all attributes of true culture."

Profit-Sharing Project

Miss Leontovich's plan is in its essence to organize a well-balanced repertory of proven actors as well as young players who would be willing to devote their time to the project, working for moderate salaries, and on a profit-sharing basis. If, when such a guild was under way, important screen names wished to participate, they would, of course, be welcomed. Many of them yearly forsake Hollywood for a return to the Broadway footlights, and for the various Eastern stock companies. With a theater in Hollywood this would no longer be essential.

Such a Hollywood theater project, Miss Leontovich believes, should be free from all entanglements or commitments to the studios which would tend to hamper it as a free thinking, free operating unit.

I feel there is really something to Miss Leontovich's idea. In the Moscow Art Theater great plays, great directors and fine actors were discovered and the theater played to millions of people both here and in Europe.

Virginia Dale Shies at Marriage

Hollywood, Aug. 17 (AP).—Maybe it was just coincidence, but the day after she finished working in a movie with tiny twins, Virginia Dale announced she didn't intend to marry until she is 30.

Virginia worked for two days in bed with the two infants, the Pitties youngsters, who were only 3 weeks old, in a little piece for the fall trade called "The Quarterback."

The next day she said, "I do not choose to marry until I am 30. By that time I will have made up my mind what type of man I want to wed. Meanwhile, I hope to keep right on working."

Virginia's press agent says that Virginia says she is 21. And she looks it.

She's very blonde and very peppy and very cute.

Any of you fellows be out this way in eight or nine years?

Critic Reviews Pre-War Theater In Far-Flung Corners of World

By Richard Watts, Jr.

HEREWITH you will find, if you are willing to bear with me, a sort of running account, arranged alphabetically as to countries, of the international musings of a drama critic, who usually is wandering in foreign climes at this time of the year, but who, finding himself at home for a change, discovers that the theater and some of the lands he has visited are somewhat intermingled in what is left of his mind.

ALBANIA—It seemed an agreeable, if slightly rundown, little country when I visited it way back in 1934, in the days when it was making what was to be virtually its last stand against Italian imperialism, and I felt rather affectionate toward it from the start. It seemed pretty far from the theater. Then I motored from the port of Durazzo to the capital at Tirana and paid a visit to the American legation. The minister was a pleasing gentleman named Post Wheeler, and as we talked about Balkan politics the Broadway drama was far from my thoughts. "By the way," said Mr. Wheeler, as our discussion of a recent Bulgarian coup d'etat lagged, "do you know a man in New York named John Golden? He is thinking of producing a play of mine."

BULGARIA—The most attractive of the Balkan countries, to my mind, and possessing in Sofia a charming capital, Bulgaria has been badly used by both international politics and the theater. Even though I lament its connections with the dictator powers, I hope that it manages to get its old boundaries back. I trust that the drama will apologize to it some time also. For in "Arms and the Man" Bernard Shaw was cruelly caustic to this embattled little land, and only last year one of the season's worst plays, something called "Pastorale," dared to mock it with patronizing contempt.

BURMA—The train trip from Lashio, near the Chinese frontier, to Mandalay passes through some sensationally beautiful country, the Burmese girls smoke cheroots, just as Kipling said, and the American consul in Rangoo, A. C. Brady, is as delightful a gentleman as you are ever likely to meet. Incidentally, if you are going to Rangoon, I trust you will arm yourself with the latest lore of the New York Giants, for Mr. Brady will want to hear it. But the only reference I can make to the drama in conection with Burma is that it is a country that the cinema has taken for its own.

CHINA—I still have a crush on China, even though I have been unable to reach that sad and valiant country this year. The fight the Chinese continue to put up against the Japanese, despite increasing odds against them, is one of the few encouraging things in modern history.

ENGLAND — Sometimes hard things have been said in this column about the English drama, but the fact that many more plays are running in London today than in New York, says something pretty admirable about both the British drama and the British spirit. Some of Hollywood's English actors, though, do seem to be striving earnestly to destroy as much as they can of the fine impression their nation's valiant tenacity against Nazi fury is holding up in his country.

FRANCE—The sad fate of France threatens to deprive the world of many splendid contributions to its culture and its spirit, but one thing which will not be missed is the modern French theater. At least, I am glad that on the day war was declared I went up to Sacre Ceur and gazed down once more on the incomparable city that was Paris, and for the time being had the hope that the Third Republic would triumph. I wonder when we can bear to look upon Paris again.

GERMANY—Although I was one of those who enjoyed Miss Clare Boothe's "Margin for Error," I can see why London found it an unexciting and dissatisfying play. It never has been easy to write a good anti-Nazi drama, but at the moment it would require nothing short of genius to achieve such a work. One more thing that the cold and brilliant efficiency of the German military machine has accomplished is the destruction of the myth that laughter and contemptuous satire were just what were needed to pulverize Hitlerism.

IRELAND — Thanks to Sean O'Casey and Paul Vincent Carroll, Ireland is likely to be the only European land that will be represented here by a new drama this fall. Meanwhile, I can only hope that Eire is not being foolishly overconfident of its ability to fight off a Nazi invasion by itself.

ITALY—Before he died, Pirandello became sympathetic toward fascism. Had he lived and not been taken in by Mussolini he would have been just the dramatist to analyze the tragic grotesque effort to make so fine a people go in for a career of conquest for which they are so ill-equipped temperamentally.

JAPAN—The inefficient imperialists of the East are not behaving in a manner to make the world proud of them, but they do have a sense of beauty. Yet you would hardly recognize even that if you attended one of those elaborate and dull musical shows at the Takarazuka Theater in Tokyo. Anyway, Tokyo's Imperial Hotel is one of the most amusing of hostelries.

RUSSIA—The U. S. S. R. may not be behaving gloriously these days, but I will always remember with pleasure the delightful production of "Hamlet" at the Vakhtangoy Theater in Moskow, with the Prince of Denmark, a shrewd little political schemer, and Ophelia an ambitious girl who got drunk, sang alcoholically about rosemary and remembrance and then fell into the lake.

SPAIN—When I was in Valencia in 1937 I talked to Jacinto Benavente, the dean of Spanish playwrights. He was old and deaf and very tired. Then the Fascists took Valencia and the last report I heard was that Benavente was in a concentration camp. I wonder what has become of him.

Brenda Joyce (below), in "Maryland," playing a repeat engagement on the Columbia screen. Joe Penner and Rosemary Lane (right), in "The Boys from Syracuse," now in its second week at RKO-Keith's.

James Stewart and Jeanette MacDonald, in "Rose Marie," current revival at the Little Theater.

June Duprez and John Clements, in "The Four Feathers," this week's revival on the giant screen at the Mount Vernon drive-in theater.

Make-Up Men Work Hard to Age Players

The toughest makeup job in Hollywood today is being undertaken by Wally Westmore's make-up crew on location at Lake Arrowhead with the Bob Burns starring picture, "Comin' Round the Mountain," the first all-hillbilly motion picture, with its all-radio cast.

A quarter of a ton of human hair and 500 pounds of make-up are being used on the principals and hillbilly extras feuding and singing in the towering San Bernarino Mountains as the location scenes are filmed.

But the real task of the make-up crew assigned to the picture is the aging of a score of members of the cast and bit players.

Principals taken from popular radio programs, including the young "Uncle Ezra," and the even younger William Thompson, of "Old Timer" fame on the air; Harold "Gildersleeve" Peary, and Cliff Arquette, none of whom has reached 30 years of age, must be made to appear 60 and 70 years old, between 5 and 7 a. m. daily, for their film work, while bit players who are hillbilly types but far too youthful in appearance for veteran feudists, also must be aged.

Everyone in the cast and the scores of extras as well, must have body make-up, as shirtsleeves and shoes are taboo in the hills of Tennessee, where the scenes are laid.

Actress to Stage Own Poetic Play

Not content with her career as a rising young star, Laraine Day now turns poetess.

"Goldilocks and the Three Bears," by Laraine, is in blank verse and set to music.

The Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer actress will produce the novelty as a stage musical.

Film Success Hasn't Changed Mary Martin

didn't remember that only a few months before he had curtly turned down her application for the job—at $40!

By this time all the studios were bidding, too, in stratospheric figures. Even little Republic asked if she'd please come out and be a lady star in horse-opera—she being a Texan and all. Miss Martin said thanks, but she couldn't ride. She decided to go to Paramount.

Her velvet and whalebone costumes in "Victor Herbert" certainly were modest enough to please Son Larry or anybody else, and for a while it looked as if her career was going to be muffled as unhappily as that of another major league stripeuse, Gypsy Rose Lee. Miss Martin, while she calls "Victor Herbert" the worst picture she ever saw, was glad it introduced her to fans in a non-naughty, well-covered role.

"Rhythm on the River" lets her wear slinky evening gowns and short-skirted skating costumes, sing four numbers, be wooed by Bu-buh-bing Crosby. Their love scenes were shot last—a mistake, because the actress got the giggles, remembering how they had clowned through the picture. Even austere Basil Rathbone and dour-faced Oscar Levant had a good time making it. Usual shout from the crew when they finished a scene was, "get the net, boys! Martin's loose again!"

She wins her friendships easily. Her life in Texas has imbued her with a stanch disregard for class distinctions. She is as gracious to the man who sweeps up the sets as she is to her producer. And everyone likes it. Wherever she moves, formality is banished. Her smile is the big, all-inclusive, winning kind. And she's like that wherever you may find her—at home, at the studio, at parties. She's still the Martin girl from Weatherford, Texas—not Mary Martin, Hollywood star.

She works best with a director who encourages her with compliments, and she treasures the one Victor Schertzinger gave her—that she is becoming an even better actress than a singer.

Last May she ran away again to be married, this time to Paramount's story editor, Richard Halliday. The couple rushed back in time for Miss Martin to play her first love scenes with Basil Rathbone.

Halliday calls her "Ba-bee" and "Baby Pie"; she is the only person who calls him Richard, instead of Dick, usually tags on an affectionate term. Since she always has hated shopping, she lets him tell her when she needs new clothes. It also was Halliday who firmly decided they ought to take up bicycling for exercise, and Miss Martin dutifully accompanies him on long rides through the countryside.

They bought a house and moved in at once, though they had only a bed, a bridge table and two chairs for furnishings. First time the interior decorator came for a conference, Miss Martin graciously gave him her chair, reclined on the bed and slept through the discussion of rugs and draperies.

Other member of the household is a gigantic Russian wolfhound, which secretly terrifies Miss Martin, though she wouldn't part with the creature. The dog was Larry's idea of a perfect wedding present to his mother, and as for Miss Martin, she said it was exactly what she had wanted all her life.

One Director Has Survived Sans Wrinkles

By Alexander Kahn

Hollywood, Aug. 17 (U.P.)—In a town where the man who toots the loudest horn is the biggest noise, it is refreshing to wander across a person like Mitchell Leisen, the director, who frankly remarks that his pictures are only as good as the material supplied to him by the writers.

"Writers are the most unappreciated people in Hollywood," said the director, as we waited for a set change to be completed for his current film, "Arise, My Love."

"If a writer turns in a story that fails to click, there is little that a director, no matter how capable he may be, can do except partly cover over the story flaws.

"I'm a great believer in picking a skilled man for a job and letting him do it. If a good writer puts in an honest effort on a story, in most cases the result is an entertaining picture. But frequently directors, producers and even studio heads will try to tell the writer his business and it usually winds up with a poor film.

Actor Can't Save Bad Story

"The same thing is true about acting. My theory is that an experienced actor, given a part that fits his appearance and personality, in most instances will give a smooth performance, if the story hangs together. A good actor can't save a poor story, although his individual performance may be so outstanding that the picture is worth seeing in spite of the poor story. "When I read a scenario, I see every scene mentally. The story becomes a series of pictures to me. If I come across a scene which I can't create in my imigination, I get worried about it. And frequently the writer, when asked to pantomime the scene, ends up by rewriting it."

Leisen is known as a director who gets along well with feminine stars, who brings out top-notch performances from them. But he declines to be tagged a miracle worker.

"It's all a matter of getting the players to relax, catch the spirit of the picture and be natural. The first few days on any picture are the most trying and I like to handle the easiest scenes then."

Dialogue Overemphasized

Although he wants well-plotted stories, Leisen thinks that the importance of dialogue has been vastly overemphasized in pictures.

"The exact words are of little consequence to the dramatic value of a picture. The thought behind the words is what I want to put over.

"That's why I never object if an actor in delivering his lines changes a word or two, provided he puts over the idea. I want them to be the person they are playing and to the devil with mechanical movements that reek of rehearsals."

And perhaps this refusal to worry about non-essentials is the reason that Leisen, after 20 years in the motion picture industry, does not have rings under his eyes and wrinkles in his brow and yet continues to turn out hit pictures. He should give lessons to other directors on "how not to worry and yet make movies."

various picture people who have appeared there this summer at their Town Hall Playhouse. "Gloria Stuart, Arthur Treacher, Alison Skipworth, Frankie Thomas and others have been here. Gloria Stuart has made a favorable impression. Everyone thinks she is charming. Sir Guy Standing's son is here with his great Dane and wife. He's a very good actor, but not very good-looking. His dog is a beauty . . . Alison Skipworth got so annoyed at a waitress over a mere cup of tea that I'm afraid she hasn't left a very pleasant impression."

Ann Shaw believes she has solved the mystery of the dearth of leading men: "The fault lies, it seems to me, in the fact that magazines and newspapers prefer pictures of beautiful girls to those of handsome men. The names and faces of Lana Turner and Linda Darnell were familiar to me long before I saw either of them in a picture, because fan magazines found their faces decorative, and so they were given far more publicity than their actual contributions to the movies would merit. Thus, in a short time, they are stars. On the other hand, a male newcomer must wait until he has made a dent on the public through a series of good parts, before he is able to get pulicity comparable to that of females . . . A good example is Patric Knowles. He is handsome and charming, and intelligent as well. It's too bad he isn't a girl—because with his 'oomph' he'd be on every cover on the newsstands. On the other hand, however, I wouldn't be writing this letter is he were on every cover—would I?" No, dear, and I wouldn't be printing it—maybe!

Along the same line, another reader, who evidently sees our directors in action, thinks some of them might make better leading men than the players they direct. She says: "I just read 'Ethan Allen,' by Stewart H. Holbrook, and then as I so often do, tried to cast it. I tried to think of a lusty, robust swashbuckling American leading man to do it—and I couldn't! They all need a hypo of starch! Rod Cameron looks like a boy that could grow into this type of screen hero, but who can tell what the future holds for him? At the moment, the only American swashbuckler I can think of is Director Bill Wellman, and the public doesn't get to see him do his stuff on the screen! What do you think?" I think you have something there, my girl, but how you're going to put it over is something else again.

The Gal's Right

Julie Welch, of Syracuse, has written me about the doings of an up-and-coming Little Theater group there, and says: "What I want to know is why the heck can't Hollywood send some talent scouts to Syracuse and discover our hidden talent? We have a pretty darn good organization and good-lookers, too . . . I'm sure our Bill Lundigan wouldn't mind playing opposite one of his home-town gals." Knowing Bill, I'm sure he'd jump at the chance. If there's any snob about Bill, I've yet to see it.

Oh, gosh! Here's a period—and I haven't half finished. Well, I'll save the rest for another Sunday and add the batch of new arrivals which just came in. Adios!

Talcum Powder Bullets, One Of 'Hazards' Movie Stars Face

Screen Soldiers Dodge 'Shell-Bursts' Composed of Soft Earth and Ground Cork Set Off to Shoot Straight Upward

By Ted Gill,
Associated Press Staff Writer

Hollywood, Aug. 17.—Motion picture studios . . . like munition works abroad . . . are keeping busy these days . . . loading up bullets . . . only the movies are doing it the sissy way.

Whereas the armament makers in Europe are filling their bullets with pellets of lethal lead . . . The flickers are packing theirs with . . . of all things . . . just plain old talcum powder . . . of the bathroom variety.

Yes sir-e-e-e, it's becoming so now-a-days it's almost a pleasure to get wounded for the movies . . . just imagine a big husky cowboy or gangster-villian getting shot . . . just south of the border . . . with a full charge of sweet essence of lilac . . . woo-woo!

Actually, and oddly enough, some studios manufacture many of the blanks shot off in wild western and other gun battle scenes . . . and most of them are made by hand . . . the reason is that some commercially manufactured cartridges do not produce a flash which, when detonated, will photograph just right for the movies . . . so they have found that talcum powder will do the trick just dandy . . .

Over on a desert location for the filming of "Arizona," camera technicians found that the flashes from bullets they had purchased from stores didn't, when photographed for the screen, look enough like bullet flashes are supposed to look . . . so they had to sit down and unload 25,000 rounds . . . pack the bullets with a powder combination that would increase the length of the flashes by a mere two inches . . . and then load them all up again by hand.

Each movie studio possess a veritable arsenal . . . enough bayonets, swords, bullets, pistols, rifles, machine guns and cannon to equip a sizeable army . . . for instance, Twentieth Century-Fox alone has more than 4,000 weapons on hand for various gun battle scenes . . . and all must be registered with the proper authorities.

• • • •

A few of the guns the studios use, of course, definitely are phonies . . . in fact, some prop men are always throwing together new and unusual looking freak weapons to spring on the public . . . recently one unique studio-made machine gun used in a picture brought a letter to the boys on the Rox lot from a movie fan gun expert back in Philadelphia . . . saying he wanted to buy one just like it, regardless of cost . . . but the studio wouldn't sell.

• • • •

And, speaking of weapons, did you ever stop to wonder why it was that so many soldiers could charge across a movie battlefield . . . with hundreds of bombs bursting all around . . . and none of them actually get hurt? . . . the answer is simple . . . they're not real powder bombs at all . . . they are merely charges of soft dirt and ground cork . . . packed in large steel tubes that are buried on end in the ground . . . and set off with proper timing by compressed air.

All tubes are deftly marked so that each "soldier" can tell where it is . . . then he can run right up to the edge of it . . . and when its load of cork is discharged . . . it doesn't fly sideways and injure the the actor, but instead, is propelled straight up in the air.

It may sound unimportant to you, but some of the studios are getting a lot of headaches trying to improve the shape of their bullet holes . . . with the hero backed into a tight corner . . . and bullets seemingly biting into the walls behind him . . . the movies must see that the holes those bullets apparently make are realistic.

For instance, under present methods of simulating the effect of bullet marks, holes are drilled into the walls, filled with tiny steel tubes packed with small charges of powder . . . and then sealed over with plaster to look like the original surface . . . a prop man behind the scene explodes each one electrically every time a bullet is supposed to strike the wall . . . causing patches of plaster to fly.

But those holes almost invariably turn out to be perfectly round . . . whereas experiments with real bullets show they should be considerably jagged . . . so, if anybody has any new or slightly used realistic bullet holes kicking around that they don't need, the studios certainly would appreciate them . . . and at the same time get relief from an awful headache.

No Hiss as Snake Sips Star's Milk

Lionel Barrymore has always scoffed at snake stories, but probably will believe more of them, now that he has been "adopted" by a snake.

At his farm in the San Fernando Valley he observed a large bull-snake which had crawled onto his brick patio to bask in the sun. He watched the reptile for a while, then, out of curiosity, set out a saucer of milk. The snake lapped it up.

Since then the snake appears every afternoon for his saucer of milk.

"It's a good thing to have it around," adds Barrymore, "because bull snakes are death on rattlers."

Stageline War Depicted

The rivalry between two stagecoach lines during the frontier days in Arizona is thrillingly told in "Stage to Chino," George O'Brien's newest outdoor offering. Virginia Vale, Hobart Cavanaugh are prominent in the cast.

Bizarre Jobs Sprout In Some Fertile Minds

Many Hollywood Unknowns Have Thrived In Unique Occupations That Add Much To Effectiveness and Profit of Film Plays

By Nelson B. Bell

TO ACHIEVE a distinctive individual niche in Hollywood, it seems, one's aspirations need not necessarily be confined to becoming a noted actor, actress, writer or director. There are other avenues of enterprise and endeavor that return handsome profits to a large number of persons of whom the public never, or, at least, rarely, hears. In a complex and far-flung industry they are so many, in fact, that the whole thing becomes a little bewildering and a constant source of wonder.

BELL

It might be well, at this point, to bear in mind that an approximate total of 276 arts and crafts is involved in the fabrication of the run-of-the-mill motion picture feature, as well as in the shaping of many of the more pretentious of the shorter screen subjects, which so frequently deserve more widespread and respectful consideration than they receive. There are thousands of journeyman jobs embraced in these multifarious outlets for creative human effort, many of them distinctly bizarre and not to be found in the catalogues of usual occupations.

Many of them are the results of the exigencies of a giant enterprise that cannot be definitely or specifically "graphed," or measured by any of the customary yardsticks of the mercantile world. Some are the immediate outgrowth of personal talents never deliberately sought, but, when accidentally happened upon, found well-nigh indispensable to successful and "fool-proof" picture-making. Most of these latter never come to light. Some of them do.

A Few Twists of the Wrist Make a Career

THERE IS, FOR EXAMPLE, the case of Mr. Bhogwan Singh. Mr. Singh bobbed up at Universal one day back in 1913 and for the ensuing 27 years has done rather nicely for himself because he knows how to twist a piece of cloth in the neighborhood of 100 different ways. It sounds just a little silly, but to Hollywood Mr. Singh is a very important individual.

The cloth he twists with so versatile a genius technically becomes a turban, when properly wrapped, and Mr. Singh is the film colony's official turban-wrapper. He prevents riots in Asia and otherwise serves the industry well.

Turban-wrapping became important to Hollywood when Hollywood discovered that there were myriad ways to wrap a turban and that each way denoted a specific caste. It all reposes in the twist and if a Brahmin twist is placed on the head of a Hindu, theaters are wrecked by riots in India, the Malay States and divers and sundry other Oriental nations, where they take their turbans seriously. Soldiers twist their turbans differently from laborers and beggars twist theirs differently from babus.

Bhogwan Singh professed to know all this that day he showed up at Universal so long ago and has been worth his weight in gold to the West Coast studios ever since. As it turned out, he did, as he professed, know his stuff, insofar as it went into the making of Oriental headgear.

I learned a little of all this when Sabu, the "elephant boy" visited Washington some years ago, wearing a headpiece that contained more fabric than the tablecloth at the Washington Hotel, where we lunched.

It is not one, but several twists by which Mr. Singh has become great in his day and generation.

World's Canned Weather Always on Tap

THEN THERE IS the keeper of the weather. He is the Hollywood specialist who has had something to do with the undoing of Mark Twain's famous remark that everybody talked about the weather but nobody did anything about it. This gentleman does a great deal about it. His name is Don Harrison—a lean and lanky, brown-haired Texan, in charge of the canned weather at Paramount.

What with process photography at its present peak of perfection, it is possible to inject any brand of weather into a picture and it exceedingly behooves any top-flight studio to have its climatic changes at its finger tips, in a manner of speaking. This is Mr. Harrison's unique assignment. Mr. Harrison's photographed weather is neatly arranged in cans, each carefully labeled. Sitting next a can marked "Day in June" is apt to be one stenciled "Squall" and next to that, possibly, another labeled "Snow Storm," and so on. Mr. Harrison is a man who has to keep his wits and his weather always about him.

"It would be pretty silly, wouldn't it," he inquires blandly, "if I should send a hurricane out to a sound stage when the director wanted merely an April shower?"

But Weatherman Harrison's job is one of the few unique occupations that occasionally is its own reward. On dull winter days when he hasn't much to do, he says he gets out the Hollywood weather and runs it for his own amazement. "Just sun and blue skies. Makes a fellow feel wonderful!"

Rubber Typewriters and Those Breakaway Vases

THE PROPERTY MAN, that indispensable factotum of every well ordered studio, of course, has come in for his full share of credit long before this. But even he feels deeply the manifold gradations of his "art."

Art Camp is a Hollywood property man who draws a very deep and significant line between the requirements of straight drama and comedy. Drama, in his view, is mere kid stuff. Comedy, on the other hand, is something to make the best of the "props" perk up and pay attention.

"Drama," says Mr. Camp, waving a rubber replica of a typewriter over his head, "is a pipe. Take gangster stuff. You get a bunch of gats from the gun room and you're all set. Somebody gets shot, you get a dime's worth of court plaster and adhesive tape and some phoney blood and your job's done.

"Comedies? Phooey. Take this typewriter. A drama never would need a rubber typewriter. But in 'Arise, My Love,' Claudette Colbert's got to slap a guy down with a typewriter. If we used a real one, we'd bust the guy's head. Not only that, we'd bust the typewriter and they cost real dough. So I spent a week figuring out how to do it and I come up with this. I hope it works.

"Then there's the matter of the breakaway Chinese vase. Nobody busts Chinese vases on people's heads in a drama. But in this comedy it's got to be done. So I find a real Chinese vase and I tow it to the prop shop and I say to the boys that they've got to make one just like it, only it has to be light and bust easy. Somebody taps Walter Abel on the head with it.

"So am I through? No. I got to get a bunch of bandages, because Ray Milland and Abel make love to Colbert in a way she doesn't like and she slips 'em one. Right on the nose. That's kind of her trademark. Then we've got a rough-and-tumble, too. Things get busted around a bit.

"And now that typewriter's shrunk again! I've had three of 'em made and every time they got in a hot room they dried out and shrank. Now I've got to have another one made. You can have your comedies!"

And as far as these gentlemen are concerned, you can have your acting, writing and directing jobs. They'd rather have the ones they've got—even if they do grumble about them occasionally.

Actors, writers and directors have been known to grumble now and again, too.

Sylvan Theater And Watergate Share Last Bills

Two outstanding events remain on the 1940 summer festival schedule of the Community Center and Playgrounds department and the Office of National Capital Parks, the first of which, "Rip Van Winkle," will be presented by the Washington Players in the National Sylvan Theater at the Washington Monument on Tuesday, August 27, closing the season there.

The other event will take place at the Watergate on Wednesday, September 4, and will be the Columbia Light Opera Company's production of the popular operetta, "Blossom Time," postponed from August 20 at the urgent solicitation of the National Symphony Orchestra, in order not to interfere with their season there. The public is asked to note that there will be no summer festival performance this week at the Sylvan Theater due to this circumstance.

"Rip Van Winkle" has the distinction of holding the theatrical record of 16,000 performances on the road in this country, playing over a period of 50 years. The famous American literary classic, by Washington Irving, and adapted to the stage by Joseph Jefferson, for his own use, has no peer in the long annals of American stage successes. Even after the death of the beloved Joe Jefferson, his successors had a continued success in the role of the lovable old fellow, who slept for 20 years in the Catskill Mountains, while the world changed and went on in the Village of Falling Waters.

For the Washington Players' revival of "Rip Van Winkle," Harry Welker, now of Baltimore, an outstanding member of the Cathedral Players and the successful Vagabonds, has been invited to come back to his former home to play the historic role of Rip. He will be supported by a fine cast selected by Bess Davis Schreiner, director of the Washington Players.

Sound Effects Men Discover Snow Best Bet

Paramount's sound effects technicians today are justly renowned. They can make the sound of a fly walking across a plate glass window sound like a herd of elephants parading on an acre of bass drums.

But they were completely baffled by an ordinarily simple effect. They were trying to reproduce the sound of Ray Milland and Patricia Morison floundering through a snowdrift in the blizzard scene of "Untamed," Technicolor drama of the north woods.

Everything they tried sounded like something different. One effect resembled a couple of cows in a swamp, another gave the effect of a pair of tote dancers doing a tap routine.

Finally somebody suggested they try snow. It didn't sound reasonable, but the snow machines were called in, six tons of snow were ground out and spewed on the stage. Two of the assistants, watching the film, kept step with the players and floundered through it.

It sounded exactly like two persons floundering in a snowdrift.

Ban on Mickey Due To Too Much Jazz

Mickey Rooney was banished from the sound stage of his own picture for the first time in his life, but it didn't deter him one moment.

The "ousting" came when Mickey gathered a dozen young musicians about him, handed out sheet music which he himself arranged when organizing his own band three years ago, and swung out with "Gee, But You're Swell." Busby Berkeley, who was lining up a scene at the other end of the stage, immediately moved into action and Master Rooney moved out.

But the interruption was only momentary. At the head of "his boys," recruited from among 162 youthful musicians working in the finale of "Strike Up the Band," Mickey took over the street outside. After distributing more music, which he had found piled up in a closet at home the previous night, he soon was stamping out hot rhythm again.

The only thing his band lacked was a piano, and Mickey made up for that with vocal "da-da, da-da's" in the proper places.

They kept it up for nearly an hour, with such oldies as "I Cover the Waterfront," "Frost on the Moon" and "Where Or When," all in sizzling swing.

Top Salmon Catch By Actor Angler

Frank Morgan has entered the Hall of Great Anglers, having landed two 30-pound king salamon in one day off his boat, the DoDiphin, near Stewart Island in Puget Sound. It is the biggest catch of his fishing career. According to word from the star, he will have the fish put up in tins on which will be printed the "proof" that the contents were caught by Morgan. His friends in Hollywood are due for some of that salmon, he announces.

Owen Wister Melodrama at The Roadside

The most famous group of Western characters ever assembled between the pages of a novel or on the stage will take over the Roadside Theater for two weeks beginning tomorrow night, August 19, when Owen Wister's "The Virginian" will be the attraction.

The leading character, that son of the South who went West to win love and fortune, was never named, either in the novel or in the dramatization, anything but "The Virginian." Yet he is the cowboy without peer. And his adversary throughout the four acts of the drama, Trampas, is the outstanding example of that lowest creature of the Old West, the cattle rustler.

"The Virginian" opened in New York on January 5, 1904, and continued on Broadway through April 30. Three actors in it gained undying fame—Dustin Farnum, in the title role; Frank Campeau, as Trampas, and Guy Bates Post, as Steve, the buddy of the Virginian. For many years thereafter, somewhere in the United States "The Virginian" was being presented.

The Roadside cast will include Richard Kreuzberg as the Virginian. Roadside patrons of 1936 will remember him as the soldier-cowboy in "Arizona." Since then he has done many leads in Roadside productions. Harold Stepler, one of the theater's most popular villains, will play Trampas; Kenn Romney, most recently seen as "Number Seven" in "The Frog," will play Steve. The romantic interest will be Lansing Hall, in the role of the Vermont school teacher, who loved the Virginian.

Also cast are Natalie Core, Maccubbin Waters, Jean Miller, William Zuckert, Herbert Lupton, Paul Sears, Alice Cartrell, A. Alan Fischler, Keith Adamson, Ted Projector, Katharine Knockey, Ran Schreiner, Emmy-Jane Harbin and Frank Cronin.

'Music Mute' Vaunt Of Van Punctured always insisted he knows nothing

Director W. S. Van Dyke, who has about music, despite his having directed some of the screen's most successful musicals, broke down and confessed to Jeanette MacDonald and Nelson Eddy, stars of "Bittersweet," that he once wrote a song and nearly got it published.

It was in 1918 and Van Dyke, in a United States Army camp, composed both words and music to a little number titled "Yankee Troops from Dixie." The only difficulty was that the Armistice came very shortly thereafter, spoiling the timeliness of the ditty. If coaxed sufficiently, the author will still sing it—however, slightly off-key.

"But I'm still music mute," he will always add.

Peter Lorre Intrudes

Famous for his memorable characterizations, Peter Lorre has the title role of the mysterious intruder in "Stranger on the Third Floor," RKO Radio's newest film drama. John McGuire and Margaret Tallichet have the romantic leads in the Lee Marcus production.

Glen Echo Cheats Temperatures

The Spanish Garden Ballroom is becoming the rendezvous of the Washington younger set. The management reports that the Paul Kain orchestra engagement is one of the most popular ever at Glen Echo. The crowds are large nightly. In fact, at the request of the jitterbugs, intermission time has been cut, to permit more dancing time. The crowds have been so large at times that the dancers have had to dance on the balconies.

Maestro Paul Kain being personally extremely popular with the younger swingster set has nightly filled the ballroom with as fine a group of rug cutters as anyone could expect to see anywhere. All the musicians, being young men, and the beautiful songstress, Adele Van, being young, too; it is indeed one of the most youthful aggregations of swing ever at a dance spot.

These sizzling Washington summer days have had their effect on the magnificent Crystal Swimming Pool. The unusual crowds gathering to "do something" about these hot days and nights keep Pool Manager Boyd Hickman busier than the proverbial paperhanger. For the protection of those who come to grief in over enthusiasm there is a physician in attendance at all times. But it seems that his job is a soft one. For his patients seem to have such troubles as blistered feet from walking, an occasional scratch or two, and sometimes some sun worshipper becomes too ardent and stays in the sun too long. However, he has another job, and that is to test a specimen of the water from the pool hourly, to be sure that the water is always 100 per cent clean. Under Hickman are a group of able lifeguards, all college men, all well trained. Lifeguards consider a chance to work at the Crystal Pool one of the prize experiences of the calling. In the first place, the Crystal Pool at Glen Echo is the finest swimming pool in the Eastern States and one of the finest in the Nation. There are three separate pools at Glen Echo, which makes for all-around safety. The diving pool is strictly for expert swimmers, and there is seldom any trouble with amateurs there. Then there is the children's pool, which is shallow and just perfect for small tots. And, of course, the huge main pool, with all depths and all contraptions, is well fitted for both expert and novice.

On Glen Echo's 40 acres of over 50 amusement attractions these hot summer days you'll find the amusements, the two streamlined cafes and the grounds packed and jammed to capacity every night. The fun lovers have discovered that it is the coolest spot for fun that they can pick.

Own 'Hay Day' Cue To Marxian Locale

The Marx Brothers, for the locale of their next picture, "Go West," chose Cripple Creek, Colo., and therein lies a story.

The first entertainment job Groucho ever had was as a member of what was known as the LeRoy Trio. The first Marx brother to go on the stage, he was 13. The trio played small theaters across country until they went stranded in Cripple Creek.

Groucho, "broke," got a job driving a grocery wagon for $3 a week. He slept in the hayloft above the horse he drove and got most of his meals from the packages he delivered. On that salary, he saved enough in three months to pay his fare back to New York.

So, when a locale was needed for their picture, Groucho asked that it be Cripple Creek, "just for the sake of memories."

"The hay-day period of my life," he added.

He'll Wait Until Cows Come Home Before Collecting

Hollywood, Aug. 17 (AP).—A movie producer and a cattle rancher have entered into a unique contract. Alex Reeves, of Long Valley, Calif., who owns 3,000 head of cattle, rented his herd to Harry Sherman for the film, "The Round-Up," for 50 cents a head.

But Sherman must also pay 5 cents a pound for any weight the herd may lose by running during the stampede scenes. The herd was weighed before the picture started and will be weighed again when the demands of the script have been satisfied.

But the producer figures that by driving the herd through good feeding ground they may pick up weight instead of losing it. He doesn't get anything, however, if the cows gain.

Real Silk Flags

All the flags of four different countries which are used in "Mystery Sea Raider," film of the current war, featuring Carole Landis, Henry Wilcoxon and Onslow Stevens, today were made of silk. Technicians found that cotton pennants look "heavy" on the screen and won't blow in the wind as readily as the lighter material.

THIS NEW YORK

By Lucius Beebe

The death last week in England of Sir Hugo Gerald De Bathe, one-time husband of Lily Langtry, serves to recall that at one time, in the early Center Hitchcock-Ned Center-Brook Club-Berry Wall era, Sir Hugo then just Hugo De Bathe, was something of a figure in local sporting circles and a source of constant news and delight to reporters. He possessed a fine yacht and was accustomed to give frequent parties of the order so familiar to readers of "The American Weekly," with unlimited champagne, pretty girls, titles and gaudy uproar. Upon one occasion, just after he had married the Jersey Lily at the turn of the century, he discovered that on one of these boating junkets in the lower harbor, his celebrated wife was monopolizing the attention and that he was being more or less ignored by his guests. Suddenly there was a tremendous splash, and it was discovered that Hugo either had jumped or had fallen, in full yachting dress, into the bay. Bells clanged, engines were reversed and a sailor in a gig started rowing back to pick up the master, who was swimming composedly in the wake half a mile behind.

BEEBE

"Do you know who I am?" roared the indignant Hugo, as the gig drew alongside and the seaman prepared to hoist him aboard.

"Of course, sir, you're the owner!" replied the perplexed sailor.

"Then go back and tell the captain I expect him to come for me in full dress uniform, with the longboat and 14 rowers," screamed Hugo from the drink. "Who does he think I am, to be rescued by a single seaman? One of my guests?"

Fall promises the greatest boom in luxury life in New York since the depth of the depression, when every one was eating and drinking everything in sight on the assumption there might not be any more tomorrow, when theaters boomed and de luxe store sales soared with each least gain in the market because folk thought it would be good to put away furs and jewelry against a possible long, cold night of insolvency. Manhattan is the most jittery city in the world; it screams before it is hurt, seeks the thorn by which it may bleed and is financially and economically the prize urban hypochondriac of the country. It is a city in which bad news, panic, grief and catastrophe are sought out and cherished as the forty-niners hunted nuggets. It is probably the only community in the land which doesn't laugh at the hysteria, yawp and accelerated calamity yammer of the radio news casts. And as a release or escape from its own delusions of catastrophe it turns to a physical scheme of living that fairly justifies the late Odd McIntyre's portrayal of it as the new Babylon. It stays itself against imagined grief with pheasant in casserole, flagons of strong waters and $20 a pair seats for musical first nights. During the last 8 or 10 months, as noted by this department a short time since, it has been spending its energies whisking up and down the land in flying machines and extra-fare trains, going nowhere in particular with speed and determination, but when the fall season brings people back to town the concentration of de luxe folly is expected to reach a new all-time high. Wars and rumors of wars have been discovered by trend-finders to result in a terrific urge toward dancing, and it seems entirely probable that for once Gotham will justify the rest of the country's suspicion that the entire populace lives in night clubs. The Fefe Ferrys, Gene Cavallers, John Peronas, Sherman Billingsleys, Ben Mardens and Billy Roses are toying with notions of positively cosmic honky-tonks to accommodate the St. Vitus trade. Broadway moguls are contemplating girl shows to make Florenz Ziegfeld fairly whisk around in his mausoleum. The first few months of guzzling probably will exhaust whatever foreign vintages are left in local bins and start American whisky stocks soaring in the market. There is nothing like a first-class panic to urge New Yorkers into having themselves a bust to end all busts.

The shiftless and objectionable custom of wearing the so-called slack suit around the city's streets has reached an all-time high this summer, although not, of course, on the part of any one of consequence or responsibility. It is easily the most offensive sartorial manifestation since the brief vogue of a couple years ago of men going hatless, a practice as filthy in a sooty urban midst as it was ridiculous and undignified. The no-hat rebellion, now happily a thing of the past, derived either from Hollywood, where anything that is an offense against good taste may have its source, or from London, where many fashionable youths discarded top hats and overcoats and wore nothing but a silk muffler for outer-garment with their evening dress for convenience in going to the theater. It didn't last long around Manhattan, probably because of the character of the lads who first affected it. The slack suit is perhaps comfortable, and certainly cheap, but neither fact is an excuse for its existence within city limits. Its wearing, so far, has been confined to drugstore cowboys, Broadway loafers, sharpies, pimply urchins and out-of-towners in for a Sunday among the honky-tonks of the amusement section, and neither the financial district nor Park avenue has yet encountered its gratuitous vulgarity. Probably, because of the nature of its clientele, it won't go any further, but it is, nevertheless, a nuisance and an eyesore whenever encountered. Manhattan hasn't yet gone entirely Hollywood.

From California comes one more Mike Romanoff legend. It seems that at some Santa Barbara party to which he had not been bid but where inevitably he turned up, Mike was introduced by Norma Shearer to Prince Vasili Romanoff, now a San Francisco hotel man. "Prince? Prince?" inquired Mike sniffishly. "That may very well be so, my good man, but I really must insist on seeing your credentials!"

AROUND THE TOWN: Members of the fashion press who are covering as many as two and three fall openings a day report that iced tea is a three-to-one favorite where formerly Martinis flowed in Niagaras. . . . Finchley's will operate a regular men's bar at their Palm Beach branch shop this winter. . . . The idea is, of course, to get the customers stiffish, and then sell them a suit. . . . The management had best have a care, though, because this plan was tried for some time by the Brothers McCrory, the celebrated shirtmakers of Forty-sixth street. . . . The result there was that Sam and Will were the ones who got stiffish and gave away vast quantities of their stock as presents. . . . Charles Adler, at the Tavern, has a new idea for a Broadway theater. . . . So fascinating have the electric signs become around Longacre Square that he would open a film house where the patrons could enter free but would have to pay to get out and watch the Neons. . . . The biggest watch chain in Hollywood is reported to be that of Cecil B. DeMille's. It spells his name in gold letters an inch high and an eighth of an inch thick. . . . There is a tremendous increase in sales of Mexican beers around town, now that most of the Dutch, German and Bavarian brews are unobtainable. . . . Carta Blanca is probably the leading import from across the Rio Grande. . . . A year ago only a few California bars stocked it, but now it is more or less universal hereabouts. . . . Diners are getting a giggle out of the bar sign at the Chateau Moderne, which reads: "Drink All You Want—We Serve the Best Bicarbonate of Soda in Town."

Hegira to Used Magazine Stand Brings Back Past

If you explore the side streets of any large city today, you can't go far without coming upon a small shop that looks like an abandoned newsstand. Its dust-dimmed windows are blocked solidly with magazines, row upon row of them, decorated with pictures of the typical magazine-cover girl going through her familiar routine. She picks apple blossoms, swims, lolls in a hammock, fondles a tennis racket, gathers autumn leaves and throws snowballs — smiling diligently throughout the year.

But on closer scrutiny you will notice that her smile is not as refulgent as usual; her teeth are slightly discolored. Also, her normally faultless complexion is lemished by freckles—or are they flyspecks? And the roses in her cheeks have faded to a sickly saffron.

Then, glancing at the date line on the magazine cover, you will discover the reason for her sadly altered appearance. She is not this month's magazine-cover girl, or even this year's. She has been weathering the elements and the thumbs of the reading public since some time in the 1930's. You, too, would lose a little of your youthful ebullience if you had been manhandled as much as she has.

And yet, shopworn as she is, she still has her public. Eventually some thrifty soul will buy her—with her accompanying reading matter—and she will again enjoy the popularity of her current-issue days. Although she commands only a fraction of her original price, there are times when even the haughtiest prima donna welcomes a tour in the sticks.

Air of Confusion Prevails Inside

The second-hand magazine shop is one of America's rising institutions. True, it doesn't rise very high; sometimes it doesn't even get above street level. But it rises often. It is not considered well-stocked unless the customer has to turn sideways to get through the front door; it spills its contents out onto the sidewalk, catching the overflow in troughs and barrows. Inside, there is an air of compressed confusion, as if the force of an explosion had been centripetal rather than centrifugal. Crinkled columns of magazines extend from floor to ceiling as far as the eye can see—which isn't far, because all daylight has been excluded by the surplus stock piled in the windows.

Some attempt at classification is evident. The "pulp" Westerns and detectives, selling for as little as two for a nickel, are segregated from the "slicks," which range in price from 10 to 25 cents. But congestion makes strange shelfmates. Automotive engineering rubs elbows with kitchenette cookery, medical jurisprudence with faith healing, office management with jitterbug romance, capsule culture with smoking-car humor. And the customer rubs elbows with them all as he edges his way through the narrow aisles.

There is a juvenile section, too, gay with parti-colored pamphlets detailing the pseudo-scientific exploits of supermen, rocket-ship pilots and astronomical explorers. This is the mythology of the machine age, whose heroes zoom explosively through interstellar space and work miracles with mysterious electrical and chemical forces.

Magazine Shop Is Mine of Memorabilia

It is significant that all these fables deal with events in the distant future. The youthful reader prefers to look ahead; anything earlier than the twenty-first century is old stuff to him. The tastes of the more mature reader, on the other hand, are decidedly retrospective, and for him the old magazine shop is an inexhaustible mine of memorabilia. Browsing through the back numbers, he blows the dust from such statements as:

"Whether technocracy is the final solution remains to be seen, but it is certainly the most vital move in the direction of economic rationalization which is being contemplated in any country." (Vanity Fair—December, 1932.)

"Both political parties—echoing the sentiment of all reasonable persons—agree that the abolition of the saloon was a laudable achievement, and there is no possible hope for its revival." (Current History—January, 1933.)

"Even in England you hear that he will insist that the Duke of York become King. There is not one word of truth to this obstinate rumor. The Prince of Wales, if he lives, will become the first bachelor King of England. He will never marry." (Liberty—September 29, 1934.)

"This, then, is the German army: 100,000 young specialists, smart, enthusiastic, perfectly trained. But no matter how efficient it may be, it is as yet no threat to the peace of Europe. On one side lies France with the greatest air force in the world and 577,800 men. On the other side are the 265,870 soldiers of Poland. Britain's navy is to the north, and beyond the Alps lies Mussolini." (Fortune—January, 1933.)

As he turns the only slightly yellowed pages, once-familiar faces peek out at him—some smilingly confident of recognition, others frowning sulkily as if expecting to be snubbed. Here are Huey P. Long, "Wrong-Way" Corrigan, Leon Trotsky, Representative Ziioncheck, Maurice Chevalier, Dolly Gann, Dr. Townsend and Primo Carnera. Here are honeymoon snapshots of a famous movie actress gazing adoringly into the eyes of the husband she divorced six weeks later, a posed photograph of a pompous statesman laying the cornerstone of the new penitentiary that eventually became his temporary residence, a high-speed camera study of a Derby winner who is now pulling an ice wagon.

Back-Number Browser Is a Sentimentalist

But if the back-number browser is a sentimentalist, he will linger longest over the advertising pages of the old magazines—wallowing nostalgically in the lush verbiage of the travel agencies. "Normandy of apple bloom," he reads. "Chartres Cathedral with the loveliest windows man ever made . . . Dinan, where Anne of Brittany's castle is still to be seen . . . the chateau country in the smiling valley of the Loire . . . the million-dollar air of Biarritz with the pounding Bay of Biscay in the background . . . information and literature on request."

And again: "See the history of Britain! Traveling through England's eastern counties is more than a journey; it's a panorama of history and romance. Often you have heard the names . . . Ely, Peterborough, Norwich, Lincoln, Fountain's Abbey, Cambridge . . . and a dozen more. Let them be names no longer. Make them into memories. You will find them all on the eastern side of Britain, served by the London and North Eastern Railway."

Or even: "On to Germany for sparkling cities! Distinctly different and unique is the life and art of each great city in this wonderland. Each city has its own history, customs, color and gayety. Berlin . . . Dresden . . . Munich . . . Cologne-on-the-Rhine. Honest prices, no visa fee. Write for illustrated booklet. 'Going to Europe Means Going to Germany.'"

And when at last the browser puts aside the tattered magazine and emerges from the dimly lighted shop into the hard reality of the street, with its newsboys waving headline-blackened papers, he feels like some Rip Van Winkle waking from a dream. With an effort, he puts the world of memories behind him, reassured by the knowledge that he can return to it whenever he wishes.

For apartment houses have no attics to rummage in, and dentists have become so sensitive on the subject of their waiting-room literature that they now provide only the very latest periodicals. The second-hand magazine shop therefore answers a real need. Its files offer a welcome backwater of back numbers for those who, weary of trying to keep abreast of world affairs, prefer to drift for a few hours. And in times like these, there's no file like an old file.

When a browser emerges into the hard reality of the street, he feels like Rip Van Winkle.

A shop is not considered well-stocked unless you have to walk sideways.

Film to Be Shown Radio Aspirants

The Capitol Radio Engineering Institute, 3224 Sixteenth street northwest, invites all young men interested in radio careers and who are high school graduates to see an interesting motion picture tomorrow at 7:30 p. m. in the school auditorium. No tickets or reservations are necessary and the public is invited without charge or obligation.

The film, "Radio Engineering as a Career," is entirely in natural color and was made with the cooperation of some of the largest companies in the radio industry, including Westinghouse, American Airlines, National Broadcasting Co. and Columbia Broadcasting System. It shows technical radiomen at work in the various fields of radio and also shows how men are trained for similar jobs at the Capitol Radio Engineering Institute.

The picture not only shows the many jobs open to trained men, but shows in detail how the one-year residence course beginning September 23 qualifies graduates to immediately enter the professional field. Members of the faculty will be present to answer all questions and discuss opportunities for men interested in technical training.

THE NEW YORKER

By Leonard Lyons

Clifford Odets supped at Lindy's, and was introduced to Leo Lindy. "This is such a topsy-turvy world," the restaurateur sighed; "the only pleasure I can find is in the theater" . . . "It's such a topsy-turvy world," Odets agreed, "the only pleasure I can find is eating in Lindy's" . . . "In that case," Leo suggested, "we can straighten the world by swapping our jobs."

LYONS

Many years ago Henri Bernstein, the French playwright, was in the same dining room with Ferenc Molnar, the Hungarian playwright. They never had met, and so someone at Molnar's table sent a note to Bernstein, suggesting that he come over and meet Molnar . . . Bernstein refused to make the move of recognition, stating: "I never asked to be introduced to anyone" . . . Bernstein sat in the Cafe Pierre recently and related this incident, which had transpired 3,000 miles away many years ago. "Incidentally," he was told, "Molnar lives four blocks from here. Would you like to come up and meet him?" . . . My dear sir," he replied, "I never asked to be introduced to anyone."

Sam Harris and his bride spent a week-end at the home of George S. Kaufman. Kaufman heard that Mrs. Harris was called "China," and asked wherefore . . . "When she smiles, Kaufman was told, "her laughing eyes start slanting upwards, and they look Chinese—so we call her 'China' Harris. Do you follow that?" . . . "If I followed that," said George, "I'd be known as 'Palestine' Kaufman."

During the filming of Sidney Howard's "They Knew What They Wanted," Charles Laughton was to pet a dog—but this action was constantly disrupted . . . "What's the matter, Charles?" the star was asked. "Are you always afraid of dogs?" . . . "Oh, no, it's not that at all," Laughton protested. "It's just that dogs are always afraid of me."

Recently the New York attorney general's office, which had recovered excess interest payments from some small-loan finance companies, placed advertisements in the newspapers, listing almost 3,500 people entitled to repayments. These borrowers had been charged illegal rates of interest, and more than 50 per cent of the names listed responded to the advertisement . . . This percentage of response is the highest ever recorded by the attorney general's office. It was due to the fact that the Blackstone Co., which placed the ads, realized that most of the borrowers made the loans because of race-track losses, and so the ads were placed on the track selection pages of the newspapers . . . One of those listed as entitled to refunds was Dawn Hope, the dancer, who never will appear to collect that money. Her insurance company notified the attorney general that Dawn Hope had committed suicide—because of lack of funds.

In "The Male Animal" the script calls for Elliott Nugent to read the controversial Vanzetti letter, to prove that unlettered men are frequently able to write moving prose. And when another actor suggests: "Why don't you read Hoover?" Nugent's stage reply is: "Hoover can't write as well as Vanzetti" . . . In his dressing room, Nugent heard Hoover's address to the Republican convention . . . When his entrance cue was called, Nugent turned off the radio, and told his coauthor, Jim Thurber: "I still don't think Hoover can write as well as Vanzetti."

Sid Walker is one of the comics working in "Keep Off the Grass." To get this job, Walker agreed to work at a percentage of the salary he had expected to get . . . Wednesday night Walker was one of those asked to take a 33⅓ per cent cut. Benny Baker, of the "DuBarry" show, saw Walker standing in front of the theater, bent in contemplation. "What're you figuring, Sid?" Baker asked . . . "I'm trying to figure," was the answer, "how much is 33⅓ per cent of 33⅓ per cent?"

Actor Who Apes Apes May Lose Scene to Ape

Hollywood, Aug. 17 (AP).—Anybody got a nice gentle ape?

You'd think, with Hollywood full of such a variety of things, animal, vegetable and mineral, that it would have a nice gentle ape. But it hasn't.

It has an imitation ape, nice and gentle, in the person of Charles Gomorra. He does all the ape close-ups because he is the only man in these parts who owns a monkey suit.

He'll do most of the work in "D. O. A." (Dead on Arrival), a mystery thriller in the works now, but the director of this is a stickler for realism and demands, at least in a scene or two, a real, live ape.

San Diego refused to give up, even for the art cinematic, any of the apes in its zoo and the Cincinnati Zoo, at last reports, wasn't enthusiastic about loaning an animal. Said they're all dangerous.

Ellen Drew, the leading lady, is supposed to appear with the real, live ape, but if no gentle ape's owner responds to the studio's plea she will be much happier.

New Music Firm

Organization of the Concord Music Publishing Co. is announced by Allan Palmer, president, who writes: "My associates and myself are interested primarily in issuing to the public the works of living American composers of exceptional talent. We shall be glad to consider manuscripts of piano, voice and piano, choral ensembles and instrumental numbers." The address of the new firm is 20 West Forty-seventh street, New York.

American Movies Teach Orientals To Speak English

Hollywood, Aug. 17 (AP).—More and more people in the Orient can speak English, and the movies are the reason.

Del Goodman, for 19 years Far Eastern manager of Twentieth Century-Fox interests, here on one of his occasional visits, finds it "amazing" the way the language is gaining.

"American pictures," he says, "are immensely popular, and almost everywhere now, almost everyone speaks a little English.

"It's impossible to change the dialogue to native tongues because of so many dialects. In China, for example, there are 17 Christian and 28 non-Christian dialects. In India there are five, with a variety of others in Siam, the Straits Settlements, Borneo, Burma, Ceylon and the Philippines.

"In fact, only in Japan and the Dutch East Indies do we even superimpose native titles on the film. Even if we recorded the sound in a native dialect, only a small portion of the audience could understand the particular one selected."

Japan, he reports, is now slightly ahead of the United States' 400-odd picture production annually, with other countries consistently increasing their numbers. Quality, however, lags far behind. Favorite stars in his territory are Deanna Durbin and Shirley Temple, among the youngsters; Greta Garbo and Norma Shearer, of the women, and Tyrone Power, of the men.

The fact that in some places it costs as much as $1.60 in American money to go to a movie indicates, he says, how thoroughly the American product has caught on.

Sally Vass, decorating that neat pipe line at the left, is the 23-year-old big sister of that likeable harmony team, the Vass Family, heard locally each Sunday afternoon at 12:15 on WMAL. The four sisters and a brother are airing from Chicago, where they are appearing with Al Jolson in his comeback musical, "Hold on to Your Hats."

Frances Langford, wife of the film player Jon Hall in private life, doesn't just sit around the house all day either. She warbles with Kenny Baker and David Broekman's Orchestra on the summer half-hour, Star Theater, over WJSV at 8 o'clock each Wednesday evening.

Woody Guthrie and Burl Ives are the wandering minstrels studying the HoBo News to see if there's any mention of their appearance tomorrow night on Forecast, heard on WJSV at 8 o'clock. Celebrated for their folk songs and lore, they have collected Americana the Union over which they will offer during "Back Where I Come From," the first half of Columbia's excellent experimental hour tomorrow night. "Back Where I Come From" is the brain-child of two young men well-known in Washington: Nicholas Ray, formerly with the WPA, and Alan Lomax of the Congressional Library.

Ye Radio Ed On Defensive After B-k-gs

Concerning Canceled Programs and a Few More Cheerful Subjects

By Richard L. Coe

That blitzkreig of phone calls last Wednesday when Anthony Eden was scheduled to go on the air from London and didn't, pricked our town's radio editors on a spot that's pretty sore anyway. Granted that this is a sorry time to be complaining about cancelled radio programs when a moral civilization totters above a chasm of darkness, there is a certain calming influence in getting worked up about minor, mundane matters.

So, we go back to last Wednesday. All the local newspapers, the New York Times and the Herald Tribune, both widely read in this city, listed an address by the British cabinet member at noon, Washington time. Comes noon and no Mr. Eden. And no explanations over the air. Instead, come both telephones on this desk whanging like fury. "Where's Mr. Eden?" "You said Anthony Eden was going to speak." Etc.

Checking with the station, we found that Mr. Eden had been cancelled an hour before—quite an understandable measure considering other activity in England on that unhappy day. But the listening public had been allowed to remain that hour and past the hour without being informed. "Please," we whispered to the radio station, "can't you say a word about the cancellation on the air right away quick?"

The station was swell about it, immediately made an announcement and partially halted the stampede, although many of the justifiably irate already had turned from their radios to the telephones.

Now, seriously, we're not digging this isolated item out of its grave to be a nasty, carping critic. But it does represent a too-common complaint at a time when one of democracy's dreadest needs is an efficiency to confound that of the stinking dictatorships.

Naturally radio programs are "subject to change" at the slightest notice. This is quite as it should be. But while the explanation that "this program replaces a program previously announced" is frequently heard over the air, there have been occasions when programs listed and "highlighted" have been passed over without a word of comment. All of which is embarrassing to the newspapers that have printed the announcements and admittedly inconvenient to the stations which neglect to inform the public of such changes.

Personal aside to the National Broadcasting Co., the Columbia Broadcasting System and the Mutual Broadcasting System: All this, in the spirit of good, clean progress! Please? Thanks.

Now for better things. We've just gotten further word of Ambassador Bullitt's talk, scheduled on WOL and WMAL this evening at 6 o'clock. He will discuss "The World Political Situation as it Affects the United States" at a mass meeting, under the auspices of the American Philosophical Society in Philadelphia's Independence Square.

Dorothy Thompson, who'll soon be back on The Post's "opp-ed" page, will also be resuming her radio activities after that vacation. She begins a weekly series on Sunday, September 29, from 7:30 to 7:45 p. m. over WMAL, a program originating in New York.

The World Series, in case you haven't heard, will again be aired exclusively over Mutual (WOL) by that safety razor company, which, rumor has it, has paid $100,000 for the privilege, the sum being divided among the two pennant teams and the commissioner's office in the same manner as are gate receipts.

Andre Kostelanetz and his wife, Lily Pons, will open the fall series for that auto program on Sunday, September 29. Vacationing in Hawaii, they received their contract by cable.

Above are the Bartons of "The Story of Bud Barton," that children's story of family life heard on WMAL each afternoon, Mondays through Fridays at 4:45 o'clock. Fern Parsons plays Mrs. Barton, Lester Damon is Henry, while Dick Holland has the title role of Bud. This serial, which has won the approval of many listeners' groups throughout the country, is the final 15-minute period of N. B. C.'s Children's Hour, a full suppertime hour of entertainment for the younger generation.

Radio Highlights

11 a. m., WMAL—Composed at the outbreak of the World War in 1914 and only recently discovered in a trunk of long-forgotten manuscripts, "Impressions of Youth," by Maurice Baron, is given its premiere by the Music Hall String Symphony, Mr. Baron conducting. The suite concludes the concert of the widely followed Sunday program "Ad Astra per Aspera," "Mors Ultima Linea Rerum Est;" "Vis Medicatrix Maturae" and "Pax in Bello" are the titles of the four movements. The String Symphony also plays J. S. Bach's Air for the G string; the second "Aquarelle," Delius, and assisted by Henrietta Schumann, the first movement of Chopin's piano Concerto in E minor. Lorenzo Alvari sings Percy Kahn's "Ave Maria" and Massenet's "Elegie."

13:0, WRC—"Shall America Feed Europe?" "And How Might It?" asks the University of Chicago Round Table.

2 p. m., WRC—Modern methods in air defense, with the civilian populace playing a vital part are tested at the war games involving 100,000 of the Regular Army, National Guard and organized reserves over a 1,300-square mile area around Plattsburg.

2, WJSV—Washington-Boston baseball game announced by Arch McDonald.

2:15, WMAL—"America's Choice in Europe and Asia" is discussed by William T. Stone, Washington representative of the Foreign Policy Association.

4, WJSV—Theodore Dubois' oratorio, "The Seven Last Words," is sung at the New York Fair by the Philharmonic Choir of Brooklyn.

5, WJSV—George Rea, president of the New York Curb Exchange, and Fred Schwed, author of "Where Are the Customers' Yachts?" have conflicting notions about Manhattan's financial district, but they're both competing on that literary quiz, Fun in Print. Dancer Angna Enters is also a guest.

6, WJSV—Ambassador Bullitt makes what should be a grippingly interesting talk on the France he has only recently quitted.

7, WMAL—Erich Leinsdorf conducts the N. B. C. Orchestra in an all-Strauss program, only they're different Strausses: "Buerger Als Adelmann," suite by the contempory Richard and three works of the "Waltz King," Johann: "Pizzicato Polka," "Perpetuum Mobile" and the "Emperor Waltz."

7, WOL—"Private Versus Public Ownership of Electric Power" is the subject of Theodore Granik's American Forum of the Air, a timely matter which many are trying to make a vital issue in the coming campaign. Senator Styles Bridges, of New Hampshire, one of the Senate leaders in opposing the Administration's power policies, and Representative John E. Rankin, of Mississippi, father of the TVA legislation in the House, make the prepared opposing stands. On the discussion panel are Senators Homer T. Bone, of Washington, and H. H. Schwartz, of Wyoming, and Representatives Everett M. Dirksen, of Illinois, and George H. Bender, of Ohio. The broadcast, as usual, is open to the public in the Willard Room of the Willard. And seats, they say, are getting scarce.

7, WJSV—"Phaedo," Plato's dialogue on immortality, is discussed by Dr. Stringfellow Barr, president; Scott Buchanan, dean of St. John's College in Annapolis, and Huntington Cairns, Baltimore attorney, whose book reviews appear in The Post, on Invitation to Learning.

7:30, WJSV—Crime Doctor is the program which offers cash awards to the radio audience for the best reasons for action either way in the original dramatizations by Max Marcin. This one concerns Ruby Stewart, a dance contest winner who didn't want to return home in defeat from the big city. She took a job in a gambling house to keep going and where she went was jail. Should she be set free?

8, WMAL—Frazier Hunt, European correspondent during the World War, subs for Winchell on the parade necessitated by erstwhile regular pinch-hitter Kaltenborn when the latter refused to be interrupted for an advertising plug.

9:05, WOL—That Sunday evening hour from Chicago, featuring the orchestra of Henry Weber with Soprano Marion Claire as soloist, is fast gaining listeners. The Prelude to "Hansel and Gretel," Humperdinck's charming opera, opens the concert. Miss Claire sing "J'ai Pleure en Rede," by Georges Hue, and "When Love Is Kind." "Tales From the Vienna Woods," of Johann Strauss and the andante from Chaikovski's Fifth Symphony are followed by a medley from Oscar Strauss.

9:30, WRC—Dr. Kurt Hetzel conducts the National Symphony Orchestra at the Watergate, with Betsy Baum, pianist, as soloist. Details of the program are on the music page, the latter portion of which will be broadcast.

Hearing Ahead

MONDAY: 7 p. m., WJSV—Edward J. Flynn, new chairman of the Democratic National Committee, makes his first radio talk as popular Jim Farley's successor. His subject is "An Address to Democratic Workers." 7:30, WMAL—Pertinax, the French journalist, whose work on L'Echo de Paris and later on L'Europe Nouvelle made it wise for him to leave France after the capitulation, takes a whirl on Washington Merry-Go-Round. 7:30, WOL—The Green Hornet returns to the Mutual network for what the release describes as "the winter" humm. 8, WJSV—That fascinating "Forecast" includes, besides the two folk singers pictured on this page, a "double feature" half-hour from Hollywood, with Charles Laughton, Elsa Lanchester, Clifton Fadiman, Edna Best, Roy Atwell and Richard Whorf. 8, WRC—The Chamber Music Society of Lower Basin Street takes to a new time. Paul Laval and Dinah Shore are still the highbrows—a la swing. 8:30, WMAL—Secretary Harold L. Ickes answers the speech made Saturday by Wendell L. Willkie accepting the Republican nomination.

TUESDAY: 7:30 p. m., WMAL—Walter Wanger, one of Hollywood's more fearless producers—remember "Blockade," "Algiers" and "Stagecoach?"—fancies himself as proper company for Oscar Levant, John Kieran, F. P. A. and Clifton Fadiman. 8, WMAL—Helen Jepson, whose hair is—or was the last time she was in town—platinum white, but is traditionally described as "the blonde soprano of the Metropolitan Opera," brings her voice to Musical Americana. 8:30, WOL—Lynching parties of the conservative wing will ride rampant when they hear this one: Dolly Dawn is modernizing "Old Folks at Home" and "Carry Me Back to Old Virginny" for the Laugh and Swing Club. 9:15, WJSV—Senator Burton K. Wheeler replies to Admiral Standley's recent proposal that the United States turn over reconditioned destroyers to England.

SATURDAY: 1 p. m., WRC—William S. Knudson, production coordinator for the National Defense Commission, tells how he came from Denmark at the age of 20 on "I'm an American." 3 WRC—The Budapest Quartet plays in the Library of Congress Auditorium. 5:30, WJSV—Eight reporters tour London After Dark. 6, WJSV—Samuel Goldwyn leads a People's Platform discussion of "Double Movie Features," which the local booking system happily makes a rare horror in Washington. 8:30, WOL—Cesare Sodero continues those operatic "pop" concerts in Chicago.

Listen! with Glynn

One of radio's real veterans celebrates an anniversary today—12 years before a microphone she's been, without ever going up on a line. Quite a record!

So you should know that this grand old lady under mention is an actress that's all of 16 years old.

Her name is Estelle Levy. Regularly all that time she's been heard in C. B. S.'s Sunday children's show, "Let's Pretend." In the meantime she's found time to play children's parts in the "Columbia Workshop," "Hilltop House," "Big Sister," "My Son and I," "The Kate Smith Hour," Orson Welles' "Playhouse" and—well, you name a radio show.

Radio artists were still broadcasting from draped booths into crude telephone microphones when Estelle was born in 1924.

Four years later she was standing before what was then considered a vast improvement, a carbon "mike" operated by buttons, in the old C. B. S. studios on Fifty-seventh street in New York, ad libbing the first words of Helen on "The Adventures of Helen and Mary," later destined to become the prize-winning "Let's Pretend" program.

In 1929, the year she entered kindergarten at Public School 86, Estelle's weekly broadcasts were being transmitted to the country through the newfangled so-called condenser microphones. Long, tubular things, they had to be set up vertically or suspended on cables and could not be moved, but they were hailed by radio engineers as a tremendous forward stride in broadcasting.

While she rapidly aging Miss Levy was attending Hoffman School in the early 1930s the dynamic mike made its bid for technical favor. And then while she was cutting study periods at Bentley School with Nancy Kelly, another gal who got her start at the same time with C. B. S., radio engineering circles discovered the modern high velocity and ribbon microphones.

As these were vastly improved, between 1936 and 1939, Estelle was attending the Professional Children's School with such well-known names of the theater, screen and radio as Frankie Thomas, the Mauch Twins, Billy Halop and all the "Dead End Kids." All the while, of course, getting in her radio chores and doing very well by them.

This year she's enrolled at Columbia University. Despite all the radio shows on which she appears and the fact that she has a full school curriculum, our Miss Levy continues to take piano lessons, which, incidentally, she started ten years ago. She writes music, too, in her spare time.

What she's going to do when she reaches real working age is a little bit hard on the imagination.

Night School Expansion Plan Complete

Larger Attendance Of Store Employes Expected This Term

By Lucia Giddens
The Post Education Editor

Many more persons will alternate between store counters and classrooms this fall in an expansion of public school courses into business fields.

Last session the District school system at one point was in the rare position of not being able to spend all the money allotted for a certain purpose.

Of the $8,888 for the "distributive occupations" program in night schools, only $2,500 was spent, because there was not an organizer to harness up the potential interest of store employes in additional classes.

This session, with the same amount to spend, the school system will bring in a new teacher to devote much of her time to organizing the program to capacity.

Mrs. Hazel F. Bryant, of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., who has had years of experience both in teaching and in a large store, will come here to expand the program in distributive occupations. As the title of the program indicates, persons engaged in the distribution of commodities may join the classes, after working hours, to improve their skills.

Under the George-Deen legislation, Federal funds supply two-thirds of the cost of the program, with the remainder from the school system's own appropriation.

Eleven teachers handled the night program here last session, but the number may be expanded to 20 in the coming session, as fast as the classes can be developed, it was pointed out by L. J. Cantrell, assistant superintendent of education in charge of junior high and vocational schools.

Even on its limited scale last session the program made notable headway, he said.

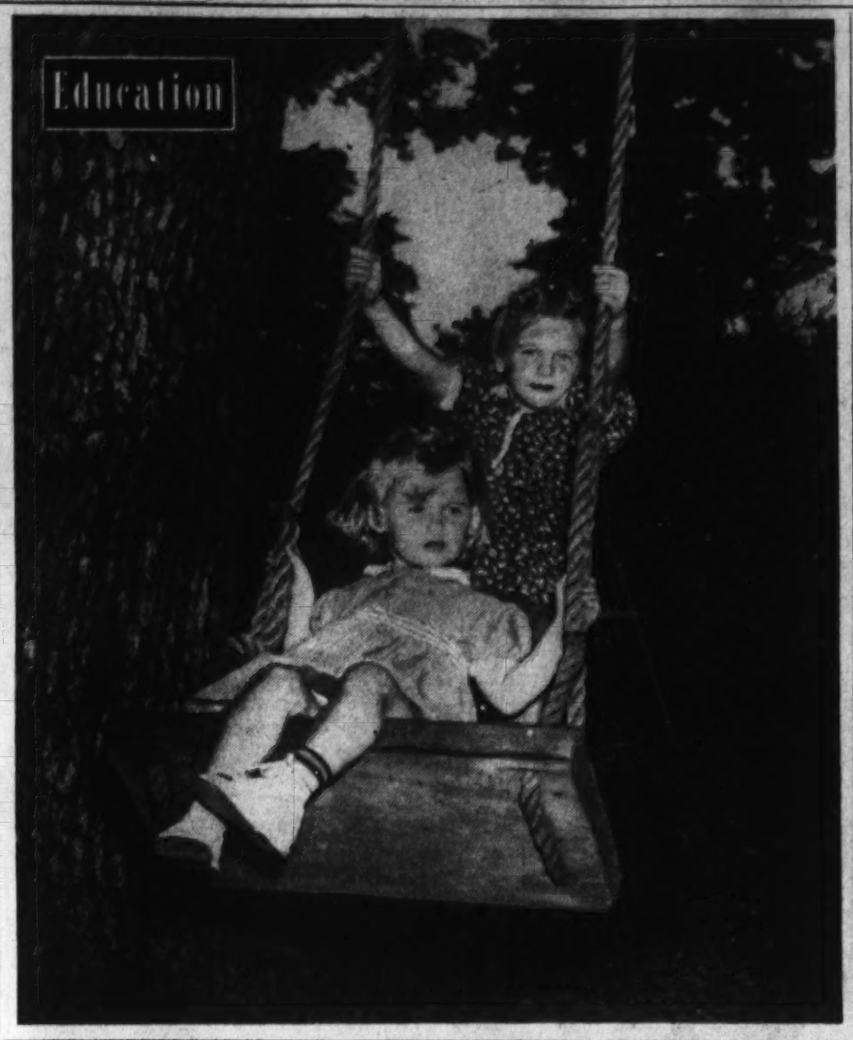
The night classes for persons employed during the day ranged from a sales clinic for electric appliance salesmen to a course in merchandising cosmetics.

The largest group, 365 enrolled in waitress training, divided up into several classes. Other classes included textiles, fundamentals of retailing, retail arithmetic, color, line and design; retail salesmanship, oral expression, advertising (for small business owners), record keeping, food merchandising.

A total of 845 persons signed up for the night classes to make themselves more efficient in their daily jobs, Mr. Cantrell said.

When the organization program gets into swing this fall opportunities for classes will be pointed out to salesmen of clothing, groceries, paint, drugs and other commodities. Classes in the same lines as last session will be continued.

In addition to the night classes for employed persons, another phase of the program is the cooperative, part-time store training for high school boys and girls.



Beverly McCann, 5, and her kid sister, Becky, 2, daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Homer E. McCann, 2230 Shepherd street northeast, seem to be enjoying themselves in the backyard playground of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Fowler, 2232 Taylor street northeast. The play yard is one of the many similar areas designed to keep children safe in their own back yards, and is entered in the "Backyard Playground" contest sponsored by the Recreation Department, the Traffic Advisory Council and the District of Columbia Work Projects Administration. Contest opens tomorrow

Business School Opens Tomorrow

Registration will open tomorrow for the thirty-fourth academic year of the Washington Pace accountancy school, which, founded in 1907, has been known since 1925 as Benjamin Franklin University Accountancy School.

To men and women who desire to fit themselves for a career in business, in Government accounting and auditing, or in public accounting practice, this school offers a distinctive course of specialized training.

Old Weather Axioms Find Substantiation In Professor's Scientific Explanations

By Mitchell Curtiss
Associated Press Staff Writer

Ada, Okla., Aug. 17.—The next time Johnny comes home with "D" in deportment he can stop dad's rush for the hairbrush with:

"Blame it on the humidity, pop."

Prof. M. H. Hatchett, of East Central State College, has kept charts of good days and bad days in classroom discipline and at the same time recorded weather factors. Studying the weather and weather adages is a hobby of his.

"We do not have to limit our search for weather signs to the behavior of plants and the lower animals," he said in an interview today.

"When the humidity increases, the barometer falls and thermometer rises, we have the scientific set-up for approaching rain and an ideal set-up for pandemonium in the classroom."

One of Hatchett's greatest delights is to substantiate old weather adages by offering scientific explanations for each.

For instance, take this one: Rainbow in morning, shepherds' warning; rainbow at night, shepherds' delight.

"Our raineloud usually approach from the West," Hatchett explained. "And, since a morning rainbow is seen only when the sun is in the East, it's evident that the raincloud is in the west, therefore approaching."

Hatchett told of an old Indian's success in predicting a rain which broke a long drouth. He failed to wax enthusiastic about any of the rain signs sighted by his white friends. Finally he saw his own sign and predicted rain within two days. It came.

"I asked him for his secret and he told me there was none," Hatchett continued. "He said earthworm castings were the basis of his forecast. They remained black on top of the ground, indicating rain because moisture in the air had slowed down evaporation."

Watergate To Feature D. C. Talent

Kurt Hetzel Will Conduct. Betty Baum To Be Soloist

Two resident musicians are featured in the program for tonight's concert at the Potomac Watergate. Kurt Hetzel will conduct the National Symphony Orchestra and Betty Baum will be the soloist in Anton Arenski's pianoforte concerto, which will be heard here for the first time.

On Wednesday night Fortune Gallo will present the last opera of the summer season, Bizet's "Carmen," with the same cast that was heard during the San Carlo Opera Company's recent engagement in Center Theater, New York. Giuseppe Bamboschek will conduct the performance, in which the National Symphony Orchestra will participate.

Kurt Hetzel is a graduate of the Royal Academy in Munich, where he studied with Felix Mottl. He was a coach at the Mannheim Court Theater under Artur Bodansky at the age of 18. A year later he was a conductor at the Strassburg State Theater, and at 20 was conducting in the Muninch Royal Opera. Coming to the United States in 1923, he made his debut as a pianist in Carnegie Hall and played 32 recitals in various American cities.

In 1925 he organized the Washington Symphony Orchestra, which had a short existence. In 1934-35 he conducted ten concerts with the New York Orchestra, the New York Civic Orchestra and the Brooklyn Symphony Orchestra. He has recently reorganized the Washington Civic Orchestra and raised it to its largest membership.

Betty Baum is a graduate of Peabody Conservatory, where she studied with Alexander Sklarevski, and is a pupil of Josef and Rosina Lhevinne at the Juilliard Graduate School. Her appearance tonight is her debut as an orchestral soloist.

Tonight's program includes the overture to Roosini's "La Gazza Ladra," Brahms' fourth symphony in E minor the Arenski concerto, the prelude to "Lohengrin" and Bizet's second "L'Arlesienne" suite.

Coe Glade, who will sing the title role in "Carmen" on Wednesday, is a discovery of Fortune Gallo and made her stage debut at the age of 18 with his San Carlo Opera Company. Two years later she was engaged by the Chicago Opera Company and made a notable success as Carmen. Since then she has sung the role more than 500 times in the United States, Canada, Mexico and South America.

Supporting Miss Glade will be Sydney Rayner, as Jose, the role in which he made his debut at the Metropolitan in 1936; Mario Valle as Escamillo, and Laura Triggiani as Micaela. Other roles will be sung by Harold Kravitt (Zuniga), Myra Manning (Frasquita), Charlotte Bruno (Mercedes), Francesco Curci (Remandado), Abrasha Robofski (Dancairo), and Francis Scott (Morales).

Seats for tonight's concert, priced from 25 cents to $1, will be on sale at the Watergate after 11 o'clock this morning. Tickets for "Carmen," priced from 50 cents to $2, are available at the National Symphony Orchestra box office in Kitt's music store, 1330 G street.

Kurt Hetzel (right), conductor of the Washington Civic Orchestra, who will conduct the National Symphony Orchestra tonight.

Coe Glade (left), American mezzo-soprano, who will be heard in the title role of "Carmen" with the National Symphony Orchestra Wednesday night when Bizet's opera will be staged by Fortune Gallo.

Betty Baum (below), talented young resident pianist, who will play Anton Arenski's concerto with the National Symphony Orchestra tonight.

Edgar Kelley Scholarship To Be Awarded

Boy or Girl Vocalist Or Instrumentalist Will Be Given Prize

First award of the recently established Edgar Stillman Kelley scholarship will be made this fall by the National Federation of Music Clubs to a boy or girl vocalist or instrumentalist who has not reached the age of 16 by September 1. The scholarship provides $250 a year for three successive years, provided that the holder shows progressive artistry, and may be used with the present teacher or school on the decision of the national committee.

Applicants must be native citizens of the United States, financially unable to continue their studies without assistance, and must be recommended by the State president. The National Federation of Music Clubs divides its activities into three geographical regions. Awards of the scholarship are to be made annually in only one of the three regions, this year in the Eastern division, which includes Washington.

Candidates residing in the District of Columbia should file before September 1 with Thelma Callahan, 605 Taylor street northwest, who will supply all essential information. Local auditions will be held on a September date to be announced later. A candidate winning locally will pass to district and regional auditions.

Applicants may perform such compositions as are in their repertoire, not to exceed 20 minutes. All compositions except sonatas for violin or violoncello and piano must be performed from memory.

Harrison Will Conduct Last Concert

Rochester Leader Will Replace Hans Kindler

Guy Fraser Harrison, conductor of the Rochester Civic Orchestra, will direct the last summer concert of the National Symphony Orchestra Wednesday evening, August 28, instead of Hans Kindler. Prior to the opening of the series the summer concerts committee invited him to return for a guest appearance at the Potomac Watergate, but at that time he was unable to arrange his schedule to make this possible. Last week he telegraphed that he would be able to conduct the final concert.

Soloists at this concert will be the popular American dancers, Miriam Winslow and Foster Fitzsimons, who appeared here with the orchestra a year ago. Their New York recital last spring was hailed by Walter Terry in the Herald-Tribune as "one of the most significant events in the American dance." The dances which they will present here will be announced at an early date.

When 'H.M.S. Pinafore' Was Staged on Water

By Ray C. B. Brown.

In my review of the recent presentation of "H. M. S. Pinafore" by the Daltry Opera Company and the National Symphony Orchestra at the Potomac Watergate, I wrote: "Although records are not available for all the performances of 'Pinafore,' it is safe to say that this was one of the few times, if not the only time, when the operetta was staged on the water." This is the place to confess that the sentence was framed with the express hope that it would catch the eye of someone whose memory would be able to contradict "the only time." Reference books are tantalizingly reticent about such details, and I wanted to supplement my Gilbert and Sullivan file with some data on this particular point. To my gratification, I have received two replies in correction of my "blunder." The first came from James M. Pickens, of Chevy Chase, who said:

Ray C. B. Brown.

"I recall vividly a series of performances of 'Pinafore' on the water of a small artificial lake at the amusement park, known as Lakeview, in the suburbs of Birmingham, Ala., about 1890 or 1891. It was my introduction to the works of Gilbert and Sullivan, and I, like many other youngsters of the community and the period, fell hard for them. For me it was the beginning of an appreciation that has grown with the better understanding that has come with the years.

"A troupe under the name of Slocum's Light Opera Company put on a summer season of operettas beginning with 'Pinafore,' and continuing with 'The Chimes of Normandy,' 'Fra Diavolo,' 'The Mascot' and perhaps other favorites of the time. For 'Pinafore' a special stage was built on the water in the form of the deck of the famous ship. It was anchored close to the shore, on which seats of the circus type were placed for the audience. In case of rain, the performance was transferred to the nearby Casino. The lake provided an admirable setting for such a piece. The beauty and the glamour of it linger in memory. And although the Watergate performance undoubtedly was technically superior, I maintain that it fell short of the one of my youth in carrying out the water motif.

"At Lakeview, the bevy of sisters, cousins and aunts arrived in rowboats from the far side of the lake, singing as they came, their voices at first faint in the distance, then growing in volumn as they approached the ship and climbed on deck. And when Dick Deadeye jumped overboard, that is what he actually did, with a good, loud splash. These touches of realism greatly enhanced the illusion of the spectacle. It was worth the modest price of admission (25 to 50 cents, I think), just to see Dick take that plunge. Many of us went again and again.

"If you care to go with me a little farther down memory's lane, I can give you the names of most of the cast (just as I could name the batting order of Birmingham's first professional baseball team). Walter Ford was the gallant Captain. The part of Josephine was taken by Alice Canning, who was advertised to have been brought all the way from San Francisco for the production. Samuel Cutter was Ralph Rackstraw; Carrie Sweeney made a sprightly Hebe, and Flit Raymond was an adequate Buttercup. The name of the impersonator of Sir Joseph Porter escapes me for the moment, but he was an awesome as well as a nimble personage. The piece had a run of several weeks before it gave way to others."

William Lawrence Clarke, of Washington, sent a copy of a letter in which he described the Watergate performance to a friend, and from it are extracted these pertinent lines:

"Forty years ago, while I was general manager at Asbury Park, N. J., our trolley line had an amusement park, Pleasure Bay, on the Shrewsbury River just above Long Branch. A splendid trolley ride and a wonderful open-air theater with a stage (like our Watergate) on the river. For 'Pinafore' the stage was rebuilt as an actual man-of-war—bridge, pilot house and everything. As the hour of 8 approached (darkness), from far down the river came a fast chug-chugging motorboat, shooting rockets and Roman candles ad lib.

"The orchestra was in place on a special float in front of the man-of-war. Their music had started and was sadly interrupted by the noise of the motor boat and the fireworks; everybody mad as sin over the interruption. Suddenly the motor boat veered to port, swung around the bow of the ship and came up to its landing platform. The entire cast disembarked pell-mell—Chorus girls and all—and ran up the companion-way to the deck, and the play began immediately. Enough of that, except to say that The Washington Post scribe would have been surprised had he seen the rough way the crew handled Dick Deadeye. At the climax of his obstinacy, they gave him the bum's rush, picked him up and actually threw him overboard, after which he clamly swam around the stern and was 'rescued' on the starboard side."

My correspondents have my cordial thanks for the material with which they have supplied me. Doubtless there have been other realistic performances of "Pinafore" during the 63 years that have elapsed since its premiere, and in the course of time I may succeed in compiling a complete list of them.

Youth Orchestra In Buenos Aires

Having played before four capacity audiences, two in Rio de Janeiro and two in Sao Paulo, the All-American Youth Orchestra and its conductor, Leopold Stokowski, are now in Buenos Aires for a fortnight. During that period they will give concerts in the Argentine capital, in neighboring Rosario and in Uruguay's nearby capital, Montevideo.

Winning laurels and experience on the good-will tour of Latin America, the organization of talented young musicians will receive a gala welcome on its return to the United States. The orchestra will be heard here Friday evening, September 20, in Constitution Hall. Tickets are now on sale at the National Symphony Orchestra box office in Kitt's music store. Persons holding tickets for the canceled concert of July 23 can exchange them.

Budapest Quartet Gives 4th Concert Saturday

On Saturday at 2:30 p. m., the Budapest String Quartet will give the fourth concert in the series of nine being presented in Coolidge Auditorium by the Gertrude Clarke Whittall Foundation in the Library of Congress. The program consists of Haydn's D minor quartet, Op. 76, No. 2; Elgar's E minor quartet, Op. 83, and Beethoven's C major quartet, Op. 59, No. 3. Performance of the Elgar and Beethoven quartets will be broadcast over the N. B. C. red network (Station WRC).

Soldiers' Home Band Concerts

John S. M. Zimmerman, leader of the United States Soldiers' Home Band, announces the following programs for three concerts to be given this week at 6:30 p. m. in the bandstand:

Tuesday—"Canadian National Exhibition March" (Goldman), Overture to "Die Lorelei" (Lachner), "The Evolution of Dixie" (arr. Lake), selection from "The Waltz Dream" (Strauss), "And the Angels Sing" (Elman), "Blue Skies" (Berlin), "Roses from the South" (Strauss), "Call of the Wild" (Losey).

Thursday—"Ceremonial March" (Barnhouse), "The Voice of Nature Overture" (Lortzing), "A Mere Suggestion" (Zimmermann), "Molly on the Shore" (Grainger), selections from "Soldier Boy" (Romberg), "Broadway Melody" (Brown), "Daughter of Sweet Georgia Brown" (Berlin), "The Spirit of Love" (Hall), "Chief of Naval Operations March" (Benter).

Saturday—"Coast Guardsmen March" (Schrode), overture to "Semiramide" (Rossini), "Chinese Dance" and "Arabian Dance" (Bainbridge Crist), selections from "Rigoletto" (Verdi), "Dinah" (Akst), "Dardanella" (Black), "Tout Paris Valse" (Waldteufel), "Capital City March" (Del Staiger).

24 Cartoons by Thomas Nast Who Invented G. O. P. Elephant and Other Symbols Shown Here

Old Posters Recall Famed Campaign That Broke Tweed Ring

Artist Also Conceived Democrat Donkey And Tammany Tiger

By Adele K. Smith

Twenty-four cartoons by Thomas Nast, executed for Harper's Weekly during 1871, are on exhibition at the Fine Arts Division of the Public Library at Ninth and K streets northwest. The group has been selected from the private collection of Leo Pascal, of Washington.

To Nast, contemporary cartoonists are indebted for the now classic symbols which they use daily in our metropolitan newspapers. The Tammany Tiger, the Republican Elephant, and the Democratic Donkey were first introduced to the American pictorial vocabulary in his trenchant drawings. The figures of Santa Claus, Uncle Sam and Miss Columbia, though not originated by him, are visualized by the average American in the form in which he conceived them 80 years ago. The new posters used in front of our recruiting posts today are exact copies of Nast's representation of Uncle Sam. Political speakers voicing eloquent promise of the "full dinner pail" are giving unconscious tribute to Nast's genius in creating graphic symbols which have stuck in the American idiom.

Thomas Nast was the first American cartoonist to achieve a position of political power and international fame through the force of his drawings.

Genius Offset Technical Faults

His inventive genius, combined with his active connection with the political issues of the time, more than made up for his technical deficiencies as an artist. Unlike Daumier, whose drawings for the French paper, Charivari, earlier in the century are valued by art collectors, regardless of the subject treated. Nast can be fully appreciated only through an understanding of the time in which he lived and the part he played in the issues at stake. Strength of conviction and the courage to fight for that conviction, combined with fertility of imagination and clarity of presentation, made his cartoons an instrument of power sought for by Presidents, Cabinet members and lesser politicians. He became one of the most hated and the most loved men of his generation.

Between 1860 and 1880 Nast's cartoons were a recognized influence in the results of major political and civic issues throughout the country. Toward the end of the Civil War, Abraham Lincoln recognized Nast's support of the Union with the statement that "Nast has been our best recruiting sergeant." Grant's defeat of Horace Greeley for the Presidency in 1872 was in large part effected through Nast's campaign of caricature, as was Cleveland's victory over Blaine.

At a time when the United States again is vitally concerned with national defense it is interesting to recollect that in his day Nast was instrumental in arousing public opinion to demand that our military force be maintained at fighting strength. As a result of his agitation the Army and Navy, which after the Civil War had declined to a skeleton force, were built up to the size which they reached at the opening of the Spanish-American War.

Exposed and Defeated Boss Tweed Ring

One of the most famous fights of Nast's career, which made him a conspicuous national figure at 31, was his expose and defeat of New York's "Boss" Tweed and his infamous ring. This battle reached its highest fury in 1871, the year covered by the cartoons in the current exhibition, which include a number of drawings which drove this political machine from power.

In the beginning of 1871, the government of New York was entirely in the hands of four corrupt politicians dominated by William Marcy Tweed. They controlled every office, owned a working majority in the State Legislature and directed the Governor, whom they had installed as a figurehead. In addition, they had skillfully hoodwinked the laboring class, intimidated the merchants and the press, bought the aid of contractors by permitting large profits and won the silence of the capitalists by overlooking tax evasion. In a period of 30 months the ring defrauded the public treasury of $30,000,000.

As early as 1867, Nast had begun, almost single-handed, to fight the corrupt municipal government. By 1869 he had picked Tweed as Public Enemy No. 1, and henceforth the figure of the Tammany chief appeared almost weekly in a bitter lampoon.

Nast was now working for Harper's Weekly which, under the leadership of Fletcher Harper, had the courage to support his attack. At this time, reorganization of the staff of the New York Times, brought it under the control of men who were willing to risk their futures on the issues of municipal reform. Together, the two papers, through editorial and picture, aroused the New York public to a realization of the vast corruption to which it was blindly submitting.

Tweed Recognized Power of Caricature

Tweed was the first to admit the efficacy of Nast's line drawings when he bawled at his henchmen, "Stop these damned pictures! I don't care so much what the papers say about me—my constituents can't read, but, damn it, they can see pictures." Further evidence of the value which the ring placed on Nast's talent was revealed when a go-between offered Nast $500,000 to study art in Europe. Nast laughed and returned to the fight with added vigor.

The most famous drawing of the Tweed group on view in the library is a double-page spread of the Coliseum in Rome. Tweed and his followers are depicted in the imperial inclosure watching a ravenous tiger in the arena mauling the prostrate female form of Miss Republic. The heading reads, "The Tammany Tiger Is Loose." The caption asks, "What are you going to do about it?" This question had been Tweed's sneering answer, some months before, to the first demands for reform. Nast seized upon his answer and repeatedly hurled the question back at the people of New York.

The tiger head had already appeared many times in Nash's representations of Tweed, but this is the first picture in which the complete form of the Tammany Tiger made its appearance. The symbol derived from the emblem of the Americus Fire Company, of which Tweed was chief prior to his leaderships of Tammany.

Two drawings which bore the issue home to the laborer are those entitled, "The Rich Growing Richer and the Poor Growing Poorer" and "The Treasury—Empty to the Workingman, and the Four Masters Who Emptied It."

The mounting wrath of the populace combined with Nast's cartoon showing the voters casting their ballots in a wastebasket scared the ring into a fairly honest vote which swept them out of office at the end of 1871. Three of the group fled the country. Tweed escaped twice from jail, and was eventually apprehended in Spain.

Drew for Weekly At Age of 15

Thomas Nast was born in Germany in 1840, and came to America at the age of 6. At 15 he began drawing for Leslie's Weekly, where one of his earliest assignments was to reveal the conditions under which owners of diseased cows were selling milk in New York. The reform effected by this expose gave Nast the first realization of the power of his pencil.

At 19 he became one of our first traveling foreign newspaper correspondents. He was sent to London by the New York Illustrated News to cover with his pictures the Sayers-Heenan prize fight. The following year he was assigned to Italy to travel with Garibaldi's army.

It was Nast's affiliation with Harper's Weekly over a period of almost 20 years that brought renown to both of them. Together they became classics to the American public. This famous combination was dissolved in 1887. Alone neither ever again attained their former prestige. It has been said that "in leaving Harper's Weekly, Nast lost his forum; in losing him, Harper's lost its political importance."

Nast's disappearance from the public eye was as rapid as was his meteoric rise to fame. At 50 many people thought he was dead, though he lived to be 62. The temper of the times was changing. The individualism and hard hitting methods of a Nast were no longer in demand. Political differences were less violent in expression. Newspapers tended to set one policy to which all employes must adhere, and Nast, too long accustomed to a free hand, could not subscribe to dictation. Unfortunate investments swept away the fortune he had made from his cartoons.

He died in 1902 at Guayaquil, Equador, where Theodore Roosevelt, hearing of his financial distress, had given him a consular post.

"The Tammany Tiger is Loose"—a cartoon by Thomas Nast for Harper's Weekly in 1871, in which the tiger was first used to symbolize Tammany. This and other cartoons by Nast are on exhibition at the Public Library.

Joint Recital

Louise Bonnet, soprano, and Evelyn Ann Foster, pianist, will appear in joint recital Wednesday evening in the Louise Home. Miss Bonnet's songs include "Caro nome," three of Weckerlin's "Bergerettes," and Delibes' "Les Filles de Cadix." Miss Foster will play Beethoven's C sharp minor sonata, Debussy's second "Arabesque" and Chopin's waltz in A flat major.

Yehudi Menuhin Due Back in U. S. Oct. 12

From Melbourne, Australia, comes the news that Yehudi Menuhin and his sister, Hephzibah Menuhin Nicholas, gave a sonata recital on August 7, the twenty-sixth wedding anniversary of their parents, Mr. and Mrs. Moshe Menuhin. Following the completion of his recent Australian tour and the two Red Cross benefits he donated in Sydney and Melbourne, Yehudi had planned to return to the United States with his wife and daughter, but decided to enjoy a vacation on the Nicholas ranch. While resting there he resumed sonata playing with his sister, and when Melbourne music-lovers heard of this, they sent many letters requesting a public recital.

Yehudi and his family are due back in California on October 12, just in time to begin his tour of the United States and Canada. En route home, however, he will stop over in Honolulu for a recital there.

Swing Sessions

with BILL GOTTLIEB

"Winnah! and still champion," according to Metronome Magazine, is Benny Goodman. For the fifth consecutive year readers of this important musicians' journal have given the clarinet man's band first place in both the "swing" and "favorite" division, with a fourth in the sweet group thrown in for good measure.

This news sounds to me—and probably to you—like the "Literary Digest" poll of 1936: because—poll or no poll—Glenn Miller and Co. is the big outfit in the business today, and not Goodman. Any showdown vote among all the juke machine jivers and prom prancers would give Glenn the royal throne by the length of his long, ermine train.

Glenn did match Benny's general average in all classifications by finishing second in the three categories. But Goodman still stole the show. Maybe it proves musicians themselves are less fickle than the rest of us; or that they have better taste. Or maybe Benny and his press agents have more relatives who read the trade mags.

Disc Data

For every 100 Nazi bombs dropped on English soil, American waxworks drop a patriotic phonograph record. Some score direct hits, others miss ridiculously. Destined to land in the best selling list, but lacking the force of the Robeson original, is Bing Crosby's four-sided "Ballad for Americans." Charles Welch and the American Singers miss out completely on their version of the same number.

Another in a noteworthy series of albums devoted to pure jazz is "Fashions in Swing," a collection of eight tunes made famous in 1924 by Bix Beiderbecke and the legendary Wolverines. Bud Freeman's Summa Cum Laudes recapture much of the spirit of the pioneers who were to help shape the form of swing to come. Only Max Kaminsky's horn suffers from comparison to his earlier counterpart—in this instance, Beiderbecke, the incomparable.

Record Briefs

Righteous Swing: Buster Bailey's (Johnny Kirby's) sextet prances through the lovely "Fable of the Rose," abetted by Judy Ellington—formerly of Washington, formerly of Charlie Barnet's band . . . Here's another reminder for you to dig, June Richmond on Andy Kirk's "Fifteen-Minute Intermission." For pretty stuff, catch the same outfit on "What's Your Story, Morning Glory," and for a potent instrumental rock, there's Andy's "Scratchin' Gravel" . . . The Pied Pipers hit hard, clean and with a lift on "Crazy Rhythm" . . . For more relaxed vocals: Louis Armstrong and the Mills Brothers on "Marie" . . . Latest of the jazz experimenters is Lou Holden, who uses unusual instrumentation, and wacky Fabian Andre scoring on a quartet of sides typified by "A Windy Day on the Outer Drive."

B. P. O. E. Picks A. A. Durkin As Chaplain

Other Officers Elected; Salisbury Next Convention Town

At the recent convention of B. P. O. Elks of the Maryland, Delaware and District of Columbia State Association, held at Annapolis, Md., E. Ray Hare, of Salisbury, was elected president. The following officers also were named: John H. Mosner, exalted ruled of Cumberland Lodge, first vice president; John W. Justice, past exalted ruler of Crisfield Lodge, second vice president; N. Bosley Hoffman, past exalted ruler of Towson Lodge and past district deputy, third vice president; Robert F. Austin, Easton, fourth vice president; R. Edward Dove, Annapolis, treasurer; Calvin K. Hartle, past association president and past exalted ruler of Hagerstown, reelected secretary; John L. Durst, Frostburg, board of trustees, and Ambrose A. Durkin, Washington, chaplain. Salisbury was selected as convention city for next year.

Cambridge Lodge was awarded first prize for the most outstanding act of the last year. The award was based on the action of the Cambridge Elks in forming a blood donor squad of the entire Lodge membership, which was the direct cause of saving several lives in the Salisbury area. Cumberland Lodge was awarded second prize for having its grand exalted ruler chairman of the national defense group of the Grand Lodge.

The association unanimously adopted a resolution expressing disapproval of all totalitarian governments opposed to the American way of life. The resolution said "we oppose the isms of communism, nazism, fascism and every other ism which is in opposition to the principles of democratic government."

Cumberland Lodge was awarded the judges' decision in the district ritualistic contest held during the convention, with a score of 99.51 points. Washington Lodge was second with 99.22 points, and Salisbury took third place with 99.14. The three lodges won elimination contests in their respective districts.

Under the direction of Norman C. Schroth, chairman, the entertainment committee of Washington Lodge will hold its second moonlight excursion of the year aboard the Wilson Line steamer Mount Vernon tomorrow at 8:30 p. m. The committee is sponsoring the trip for the benefit of the Elks Boys Band, which is one of the most active youths' bands in the city.

Order of the Alhambra

Plans for participation in the biennial reunion of the Order of the Alhambra were discussed at a meeting of the committee on arrangements of Alcantara Caravan, No. 12, at the Knights of Columbus Club, 912 Tenth street northwest, last Wednesday evening.

Roy M. Perry, chairman of the committee, announced arrangements for an elaborate program of events at the gathering, which will take place in Atlantic City on September 6, 7 and 8. Among the features announced for the event are the selection of Miss America for 1940, a roller chair parade and a dinner dance. Headquarters of the reunion will be at the Madison Hotel. Reservations by members of the order are being taken by Mr. Perry and his committee.

Ben Hur

Emery F. Weightman, president of the Hospital Service Association, presided at the final session on August 6. President Weightman appointed the following committee to adjust the financial affairs of the association: Jack L. Menefee, United Court; Stephen J. Driscoll, Potomac; Alfred Walford, Victory, and the president.

At the monthly session of the executive board, presided over by Samuel Trupp, vice chairman, the plan for consolidating the small courts into the large and more active ones was discussed and approved. The courts under consideration were Central, State-War-Navy and Northeast.

The meetings for the week are: Monday, Potomac Court, No. 208, at Pythian Temple; Central Court, No. 219, at Woodmen of the World Hall. Tuesday, McKinley Court, No. 992, at Pythian Temple. Congressional Court, No. 809, has canceled its August meeting.

Dudley, third vice commander; Clarence Shrout, quartermaster; Edward McCrahon, sergeant-at-arms; Ollie Shriver, master-at-arms, and Daniel Richardson, chaplain.

A ceremony, dedicated to the memory of Past Commander William Franklin, will be held by Costello Post at the September meeting.

Sergt. Jasper Post

The champion Junior American Legion baseball team of the Sergt. Jasper Post journeyed last Wednesday to Wilson, N. C., for the regional tournament. On Wednesday night the team attended a banquet given by the national organization for the winners of the competitors in the regional contest. Other winning teams attending the dinner were those of Baltimore, Norfolk, Va., and Albemarle, N. C.

After the drawing for opponents, the teams played on Thursday and Friday nights under the floodlights on the Wilson diamond, and again yesterday afternoon to decide the regional winner. At the same time, other regional tilts were being played in Lima, Ohio, Passaic, N. J., and Lawrence, Mass. During this week the winning team at Wilson will play the first-placing teams of each of the other sections to decide the championship of the Northeastern region. Members of the Jasper team who made the trip included Brogan (rightfield), Hill (pitcher), Sapourn (captain, first base), Carrier (catcher), Via (utility), Denikos (second base), Burke (third base), Wolfe (pitcher), Fielding (centerfield), Hoffman (shortstop), Mandes (utility), Citrenbaum (leftfield), Wilkerson (pitcher) and Avencia (pitcher). The team was accompanied by Manager Goodacre and Coaches Elliott and Price.

The post championship baseball team attended the last meeting of the post in a body and were individually introduced to the members. They were also guests of the Washington Senators and Clark Griffith at Griffith Stadium on August 8. An expense account of $75 was voted for the team's use in Wilson, N. C.

Officers nominated at the meeting were A. A. Dibble, commander; Charles Pierce, first vice commander; Martin Schubert, second vice commander; Victor Ferrar, third vice commander, and Charles F. Brown, chaplain. Election will take place at the next meeting of the post in September.

Forty and Eight

The annual grand promenade of Grand Voiture No. 174 will be held in Stansbury Hall on Wednesday, commencing at 4:30 p. m. Election of officers, members of the Chemin-not, delegates and alternates to the national promenade in Boston next month will be held, with Grand Chef de Gare W. H. Hargrave presiding. Chef de Chemin de Fer, passe Fred G. Fraser and Garde de la Porte National John Emil McCabe will be installing officers.

The polls will be open until 8 p m. Dinner will be served at 6 p. m. There will be a floor show, arrangements being in charge of Grand Chef de Train C. Francis McCarthy.

A delegation will leave by train Friday at 1:15 p. m. for Cumberland, Md., to attend the annual wreck and promenade of the Grande Voiture of Maryland. Reservations should be made with John E. McCabe.

American Legion Auxiliary

Mrs. Helen M. McCabe, of the Cooley-McCullough Unit, No. 22, Department of the District of Columbia, has been elected president of the department auxiliary for the 1940-41 season. A member of the auxiliary for 15 years, Mrs. McCabe has served in a number of important positions and has received several achievement awards for her work.

Other officers elected for the coming season are: Vice presidents, Mrs. Ossie Ritter, of Kenneth H. Nash Unit, No. 8; Mrs. Ada M. Riley, of George E. Killeen Unit, No. 25, and Mrs. Beatrice Jacobs, of G. P. O. Unit, No. 33. Historian, Mrs. Addie M. Hardy, of James Reese Europe Unit, No. 5. Legion of Valor to Meet Here August 28 To Celebrate Its 50th Anniversary

The fiftieth anniversary of the Legion of Valor will be celebrated here August 28-31 inclusive, by a reunion of members of that order.

Military and naval heroes who have received the Congressional Medal of Honor, the Distinguished Service Cross, or the Navy Cross, will gather at the Willard Hotel for the four-day conclave.

Members of the Legion of Valor include veterans of the Civil War, Indian campaigns, Spanish-American War, various expeditions and the World War. In every instance, they have performed some outstanding act of heroism and have been honored with the highest awards this Nation can bestow.

The reunion will be highlighted with impressive ceremonies, devotional exercises for the war dead, business meetings and varied entertainments. High point will be the laying of a wreath on the tomb of the Unknown Soldier at Arlington.

The golden anniversary banquet at the Willard will bring the ceremonies to a close. Toastmaster for the banquet will be Maj. Alexander Lyon, commander of the D. C. Chapter of the Military Order of the World War. The principal address will be given by Sir Wilmott Lewis, Washington correspondent for the Times of London.

Odd Fellows' Field Outing Program Ready

Celebration Set For August 24. At Palisades Park

I. O. Lund, chairman of the field day committee, announces that arrangements have been completed for the 1940 Odd Fellows' field day celebration on August 24. The exercises will be held at Palisades Community Park. All manner of athletic events, including an all-star softball game, are scheduled and prizes will be awarded the competitors. The program starts at 2 p. m. and will be concluded with a picnic supper at 6 p. m.

Palisades Park may be reached by the Glen Echo, Cabin John or Potomac Heights street cars. Automobiles should go west on Conduit road, turn left at Dana place and then turn right to the entrance of the park. Members of all branches of the order and their friends are invited.

Mount Nebo Encampment will meet August 19 at 8 p. m. The patriarchal degree will be conferred on Kermit Steyer, Nathan Bernstein and J. Lewis Skoggs. William F. Becker, degree director, will be in charge, and Chief Patriarch O. W. Youngblood will preside.

Columbian Encampment

The next meeting of Columbian Encampment will be August 28 at 8 p. m. Presiding officer will be Chief Patriarch Elmer Mothershead. Roscoe Wines, instructor for the encampment, is preparing to start a class of instruction.

S. F. Dildine, noble grand, will preside at the meeting of Columbia Lodge Thursday at 8 p. m. R. E. Michel, jr., will be elevated to the position of left scene supporter. At the last meeting Grand Master Ashlan F. Harlan, Past Grand Master Elmer Cummings, Past Grand Master Linwood Donaldson, R. J. Hall, noble grand of Metropolis Lodge, and James H. Cross, vice grand, witnessed the ceremonies of the third degree. Following the ritual, a watermelon feast was held.

Covenant Lodge will meet Wednesday at 8 p. m. Irving Nachman, noble grand, will preside.

Maj. Charles B. Lampe, department commander, announces the Patriarchs Militant and the Ladies Auxiliary of this jurisdiction have been invited by the Canton and Ladies Auxiliary of Harrisburg, Pa., to participate in their annual field meet and picnic at Willow Mills, Cumberland County, near Hogestown, on August 24. Grand Master Samuel Kohler, of Pennsylvania, has invited the Patriarchs Militant to take part in the tri-county Odd Fellows' rally September 7, beginning with a parade at 4:30 p. m., daylight saving time.

Rebekah Officers to Entertain

A meeting of the press and publication committee will be held on August 30 in Room No. 1, I. O. O. F. Temple. Chairman Earl D. Harrell requests all reprsentatives to be present at this meeting, which begins at 7:45 p. m.

Officers of the Rebekah Assembly will entertain residents of the I. O. O. F. Home at a supper party on the lawn at 6 p. m., August 21. Mrs. Esther M. Andresen, warden of the assembly, will be in charge.

Chalmers F. Groff, secretary-treasurer of the Odd Fellows bowling league of the District of Columbia, announces a business meeting to be held tomorrow at 8 p. m. at the alleys at Tenth and Perry streets northeast. All lodges wishing to enter teams for the coming season are advised to be present to make their entries.

Brightwood Subordinate Lodge No. 30, and Brightwood Rebekah Lodge, No. 11, will motor to Dare Beach today for a picnic outing. A. M. Cowell, a member of Brightwood, No. 30, who has a cottage at Dare Beach, will be host to the two lodges.

New and Enlarged Exhibits Add to Appeal Of Final Edition of N. Y. World's Fair

The second and last edition of the New York World's Fair is in full swing, with new and enlarged exhibits and greater entertainment features. You have your last chance this summer to see the Flushing show, which draws its final curtain at this season's end. Drive your own car to New York or take advantage of the reduction in fares offered by the railroads.

Here thousands of visitors have the privilege of observing the advancement of American industry and the scientific and cultural progress of nations at peace as well as those at war.

The 1940 Fair offers "America at Home" as one of the new and major exhibits. It dramatizes home furnishings and interior decorating. Sixteen rooms by decorators, designers and architects from coast to coast enliven the show.

The bachelor girl will be intrigued with "Seven Days," the smart one-room apartment designed by the decorator, Virginia Conners. A built-in settee and comfortable chairs give ample seating accommodations in a modern setting.

Another of the new exhibits to delight the women and more men than you would expect is "The Wold of Fashion." It is neighbor to the Trylon and Perisphere, taking over the Consumers Building of last season, and features an unsually smart restaurant serving excellent American food at moderate prices.

A newcomer at Flushing this year . . . Mrs. Thorne's Miniature Period Rooms are as popular as they were at the Century of Progress in Chicago.

A genius in small-scale rooms, Mrs. Thorne as a child began her collection of miniature objects when her uncle, an admiral in the United States Navy, brought her tiny souvenirs from his voyages around the world.

General Motors' Futurama continues to be a magnet for the crowds. Two thousand people take a transcontinental flight and tour the future each hour; 28,000 is the average daily attendance. The waiting line seems endless, but it moves quickly.

As amazing and amusing as magic are the Mystery Gardens in the Gas Exhibits . . . you find singing trees, talking flagstones, flaming cactus plants, smoke trees, and brilliant gas and water fountains.

So, you are hungry, as walking about the Meadows is certain to whet the appetite. If you are an adventurer in search of good food, try the Scandinavian restaurants . . . you can't go wrong. Traveling to the countries of the Far North and the Midnight Sun is not possible at the moment, but at the Fair you have the rare opportunity of enjoying their fine cooking, an art in which the Swedes, the Norwegians, the Finns, and the Icelanders excel.

Eastman Kodak has a thrilling display of color photography which has created even greater interest among amateur photographers than the fine show of the 1939 season.

The fountain display in the Lagoon of Nations still ranks tops as the nightly attraction. Water, flame, color and music produce a drama of amazingly beautiful effects.

Billy Rose's Aquacade is the premiere amusement. Last year more than five million saw the show of youth in song, dance and precision formation swimming.

At the southern end of the amusement area the "American Jubilee," the new musical revue, shows history moving across the largest stage ever built. The rhythm of the American Way from the War of Independence to modern times is told in gay music and comedy—Lucy Monroe, Ray Middleton and Paul Haakon starring with a troupe of 300 singers and dancers.

Old New York is transformed into New Orleans, where swing bands perform against a background of patio and showboat.

D. A. V. Chapter Elects Officers

Federal Chapter, No. 6, Disabled American Veterans, elected the following officers at the meeting held August 12 at the Soldiers, Sailors and Marines Club: Kenneth C. Bradley, commander; Harold J. Brown, senior vice commander; Joseph Maley, junior vice commander, and Charles A. Cartmill, reelected adjutant and treasurer. The new officers will be installed at the September meeting.

Guest speakers at the August meeting were Dr. Walter C. Hess, department commander; Earl G Hendrick, department service officer; Mrs. Francis Delia Barber, Gold Star Mother; Oscar G. Jones, veterans placement officer, U. S. Employment Bureau; E. Claude Babcock, past national commander, D. A. V.; Harold Lowy, commander of Rea Chapter, D. A. V., and Ralph N. Werner, past department commander of the Army and Navy Union. Commander Joel D. Thacker presided at the meeting.

Veterans' News

Bacon to Head D. C. Delegation To V. F. W. Rally in Los Angeles

Ann Sheridan Will Be Official Hostess To Encampment From August 25 to 30; Sergt. York Will Be Among Guests

Department Commander Leonard J. Bacon will head the local delegation of Veterans of Foreign Wars at the National Encampment, to be held in Los Angeles from August 25 to 30. The delegation will depart from Washington the latter part of this week.

Miss Ann Sheridan, Warner Brothers star, will be the official hostess at the encampment, and Sergt. Alvin C. York, World War hero, will be one of the many distinguished guests.

At the last meeting of the committee handling the details of the Armistice Day Ball, it was decided to promote a popularity contest in connection with the ball. Comrade Stephen T. Nichka was appointed chairman of the special committee by Chairman Burton. Tickets for the ball will be distributed to all posts by the chairman next week.

Bowling League

The V. F. W. Bowling League will open its 1940-41 season at the Arcade alleys on Friday evening, September 13. There will be eight teams starting the season, sponsored by National Capital, Washington, John Lyons, Follow Me-Defense, Police-Fire, Internal Revenue Posts, the D. C. Department and a junior team. All members or their friends desiring to bowl with one of the teams are requested to communicate with Phillip R. Belt, president, 708 Thirteenth street northwest, or telephone NAtional 1556.

A match between the V. F. W. bowlers of Baltimore and those of Washington is being arranged for at an early date.

Washington Post

Washington Post Vigilantes have been organized under the captaincy of Timothy G. McCarthy to serve under any emergency. Comrades McCarthy, Kojasar and Turner will visit other posts to lay the basis of department-wide vigilantes.

Past Department Quartermaster Tom Campbell was a visitor of the post and explained in detail the recent defense tax measures and their general application.

Comrade Robert G. Turnbull has received order transferring him to Fort Sam Houston, Tex. His friends will give him a farewell dinner on September 8, 1940.

The post fencing team has been challenged by the French-American fencing team. Capt. Roberts is sure of victory.

Police-Fire Post

Police-Fire Post will hold its regular meeting at Bunker Hill Post clubrooms Monday, August 19.

U. S. Treasury Post

C. B. Norris, of the U. S. Treasury Post, is the first member of the V. F. W. to be ordered back to active service with the armed forces. On August 21 he will report to Philadelphia for duty with the Navy.

F. R. Ihrie, past commander of Treasury Post, has arranged for a band concert at Mount Alto Hospital for the entertainment of the patients on the night of August 21.

Follow Me-Defense Post

Follow Me-Defense Post, at its last regular meeting, unanimously passed a resolution to notify the president that the entire membership of the post, numbering 150, were at his command for any service in the case of national emergency.

Among the visitors were Senior Department Vice Commander Lambert and Chief of Staff Nichka. Comrade Nichka announced the appointment of Comrade Downs as department deputy chief of staff.

The applications for membership of Raymond E. Waller, Joseph A. Mason and William A. Shomaker were favorably acted upon at the last regular meeting of the post. Comrade Shomaker served with the Seventy-sixth Field Artillery in France during the World War. Comrade Waller being stationed at American Post Office 741, France, and Comrade Mason was a gob on the U. S. S. Dalphin at the siege of Vera Cruz in 1914. Comrade Waller was given the member's obligation by Past Commander William A. Downs.

Comrade Melton, chairman of the relief committee, reported the death of Comrade Lee Lander, who had been in Mount Alto Hospital for the past two years. He also reported Comrade Fred Kelly was undergoing a minor operation in Walter Reed Hospital.

The annual moonlight excursion, sponsored by the post, was given on the steamer Potomac last Friday evening and was well attended.

Commander Snider appointed Comrade Downs as chairman of the finance committee, to be assisted by Comrades Fogle, Thompson and Mastin.

The following are expected to attend the encampment in Los Angeles the latter part of the month: Delegates, Comrades Fogle, Thompson and Neville-Thompson; alternates, Comrades Downs, Belt and Melton.

The post will resume its schedule of monthly social gatherings by getting together at Klein's Tavern next Thursday evening. Refreshments will be served.

The post bowling team, composed of Goodheart, Grayson, Redman, Cassidy and Preusser, will start rolling next month and is expected to make it a hot race for the other league opponents.

Commander Snider appointed Comrade Henry R. Mousseau as patriotic instructor. Comrade Joseph L. Luyster as chairman of the membership committee, Comrade Neville-Thompson chairman of Armistice Ball committee and Comrade Downs and Campbell on veterans preference committee.

Moose Heads Help Induct New Members

Deputy Supreme Governor Andrew Bitters, of the Loyal Order of Moose, and Regional Director Robert Irwin, Eastern territory representative, addressed the meeting of the order last Tuesday evening in Moose Hall, 1414 I street northwest.

Speaking to a class of new members, Bitters and Irwin stressed the advantages of membership in the order and commented on the work being done at the two Moose national homes, one for orphaned children of members and the other for old and infirm members, at Mooseheart, Ill., and Moosehaven, Fla., respectively.

Mr. Bitters officiated at the induction of the new members, explaining the various signs, grips, passwords and other ritual necessary for identification with the order. The Columbia Lodge degree team assisted in the ceremonies. On next Tuesday the team will go to Frederick, Md., to perform the ritualistic ceremony for the Frederick Lodge and on Thursday evening members of the team will hold a rehearsal in preparation for the regional championships, to be held in Baltimore, Md., during the conclave of Maryland and Border States Moose Association.

There will be a meeting of the board of officers in Moose Hall Tuesday evening to hear further reports of the Moose housing committee. John Lowe, lodge secretary, urges all members to make their reservations for the coming convention in Baltimore, starting August 31.

Women of the Moose

At the last regular meeting of Columbia Chapter, No. 368, Women of the Moose, Senior Regent Anna Gilbert announced the appointment of Kathryn Elliott as chairman of the library committee.

The Mooseheart committee, headed by Miss Othelia Woodie, is arranging to continue the birthday gifts for the boys at Dixie Hall. July birthdays were remembered by Graduate Regents Frances Mitchell and Frances Balwin.

Mrs. Wade H. Mitchell, State regent for the District of Columbia and Virginia, will speak at the State conference of the Women of the Moose, at Danville, Va., August 25 to 27.

Senior Regent Anna Gilbert expressed the approval of Columbia Chapter, No. 368, of the resolution passed at the national convention of the Moose, opposing the teaching or tolerance of any movement that advocated racial or religious persecution, and asking a renewal of allegiance to this Nation and its flag.

The Red Cross unit will meet tomorrow evening at Moose Hall at 8 o'clock. On Wednesday the officers and committee chairmen will meet at the home of State Regent Frances Mitchell, 3542 Hertford place northwest, at 8 p. m.

29th Division Veterans Plan For Reunion

D. C. Post 29 Elects Delegates, Alternates For Norfolk Meeting

Washington Post, No. 29, Twenty-ninth Division (Blue and Gray) Association, A. E. F., has elected delegates and alternates to attend the national association's twenty-first annual reunion, to be held in Norfolk, Va., August 31, September 1 and 2.

Commander Milton E. Groome has announced final arrangements for transportation and hotel accommodation of the 75 members of the Washington delegation who will attend the reunion. These members leave Washington via a Norfolk steamer Friday evening, August 30. Post headquarters will be at the Fairfax Hotel.

Members who have not yet reported that they plan to attend the conclave are urged to get in touch with Commander Groome immediately, as on Labor Day week-end both steamer and hotel facilities are taxed to the limit and arrangements for attendance other than already planned for must be made immediately.

At the meeting, held last Friday night, Commander Groome read a message from the association's national commander, Capt. Richard C. O'Connell, now on duty with the Twenty-ninth Division National Guard troops in upper New York State. The commander, in his message, congratulated the Washington post on beating its membership quota for 1940. Washington Post, No. 29, has nearly 300 members and continues to hold its rating as the largest post in the national body.

Capt. James Pistoric, of the American Legion parade committee, presented the post a citation certificate for the fine appearance of the post's uniform body in the parade on the opening night of the recent department convention.

Frank Lupac reported that all arrangements had been completed for the post's moonlight cruise on August 20 (next Thursday) on the streamlined Steamer Mount Vernon, which will leave its wharf at 8:30 p. m. The post has chartered the entire boat for the occasion and proceeds of the ticket sale will go to the association's post home building fund. Tickets are in the hands of all members of the post's executive committee and will be on sale at the dock.

Rainbow Division

Newest recruit of the District of Columbia Chapter, Rainbow Division, is Archie Francis, who served in the World War as a member of the 149th (Illinois) Field Artillery, Forty-second (Rainbow) Division. Chairman Oscar Avelin Jackson, of the District chapter's membership committee, expressed the opinion that a great many Rainbowers will be coming to Washington shortly to "take responsible positions in the Federal Government here," as a part of the national defense program.

Harold B. Rodier, national editor of Rainbow Reveille, official monthly publication of the Rainbow Division veterans, announces that the first edition of the new season will be issued this month. Veterans of the Forty-second Division who do not receive this paper regularly are advised to notify Mr. Rodier at 717 Sixth street northwest or telephone DIstrict 2109.

National Association Of Regulars' Activities

National Commander George M. McNulty left for Detroit Tuesday after a brief trip to the Capital. While in Washington Commander McNulty conferred with William H. McReynolds, secretary to the President, on the N. A. R.'s request that former service men be given real preference in filling Government positions under the national defense program. Commander McNulty also met with the War Department general staff and discussed the possibility of N. A. R. cooperation in the defense plan.

While in Washington, Commander McNulty also saw several Congressmen in regard to preference for veterans on national defense jobs, and the N. A. R.'s proposed increase of Army base pay minimum to $30 per month.

Commander Phillip Belt, of the National Defense Post, of Washington, announces the display of a film depicting Coast Guard activities during the meeting to be held tomorrow night at the Soldiers', Sailors and Marines' Club, 1015 L street northwest.

A group of N. A. R. members met last Wednesday afternoon in the Victor Building and made a recording discussing the N. A. R. and its purposes. The record will be played over Station WJSV on Arthur Godfrey's program sometime this week.

All N. A. R. members who wish to secure national defense jobs are requested by Adjt. Gen. Edgar H. Taber to register with John Arthur Shaw at national headquarters some time this week.

Daughters of America Council Plans Lawn Party in Maryland

A lawn party will be given by Barbara Frietchie Council, No. 21, on Thursday, August 22, at 3720 Thirty-fourth street, Mount Rainier, Md. The District Daughters of America, State councils and their friends are invited to attend.

Mayflower Council, No. 11, Daughters of America, held a party at their meeting hall, 808 I street northwest, August 16.

District Daughters of America State officers and members have accepted an invitation to attend the Pennsylvania meeting at Hotel Sterling, in Wilkes-Barre, September 24-26.

Applications of Guy W. Pelton and Elizabeth S. Smith were presented at the last meeting of Eagle Council, No. 24. Other candidates from the various councils will follow for the State class initiation on September 9.

Past Councilor Mrs. Florence Lazarus and her group will entertain Golden Rule Council, No. 10, at the next meeting, August 23. At the last meeting of the council, Mrs. Vera Lowry, councilor, presided, and announced that hereafter this council will convene at 8 p. m. Past Councilor Mary Nichols, of Triumph Council, No. 8; Councilor Miss Naomi Steele, of Summitt Council, No. 208, Akron, Ohio; Deputy State Councilor Ella L. Stone, and Past State Councilors Elizabeth Shepherd, Ollie Montgomery and Mrs. Floda M. Regan attended the meeting and were officially received by Mrs. Lowry.

Anacostia Council, No. 14, at the meeting last Wednesday, celebrated the birthday of Mrs. Ida Scraggs. Visitors included Mrs. Laura E. Milbourn, associate State councilor; Mrs. Harriet Fairall, deputy State councilor, and Mrs. Verna Dixon, of Triumph Council, No. 8. They were welcomed by the newly installed councilor, Mrs. Nora Lee.

A report of the trip made July 20 to Benedict, Md., was given at the meeting last Monday of the Past Councilors' Association of Anacostia Council, No. 14, at the home of Mrs. Mary Plumb. Mrs. Ida Parker and Mrs. Agnes Frye have been invited to join this association. Next meeting of the past councilors will be on September 2 at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Hubacher.

Fidelity Council, No. 4, met Tuesday evening, under the temporary chairmanship of Junior Past Councilor Miss Florence Cox. The forthcoming initiation, which Fidelity Council is to present for the State council sessions in September, was discussed.

Actions on Capitol Hill Show How Draft Will Alter U. S. Life

Job-Guarantee Proviso of Guard Bill, Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Plan Would Affect All Manner of Persons

By John G. Norris

As the explosive conscription issue neared a show-down on Capitol Hill last week, two little noticed Congressional actions gave pointed illustration as to how greatly the adoption of compulsory military service will affect American life.

They were (1) a modification of the job-guarantee proviso of the National Guard mobilization bill by the House and (2) the introduction of a "soldiers and sailors civil relief bill" at the request of the War Department.

Consideration of the two legislative moves shows all too clearly how tens of millions of Americans other than the million-odd under arms would be affected one way or another by the passage of the draft. Landlords, insurance men, automobile dealers, department stores, grocers, tax collectors, courts, attorneys, credit agencies, all manner of persons, would have to adjust themselves to changed conditions.

The Senate, determined that any men called into military service by the National Guard mobilization or the draft should be assured restoration of their jobs at the end of their year's training, wrote into both bills an employment-guarantee proviso which some people considered had teeth.

Teeth too sharp in the opinion of the House Military Affairs Committee apparently. The Senate directed employers engaged in inter-State commerce to rehire men at the end of their military duty unless their circumstances had so changed in the meantime as to render reemployment "impossible or unreasonable."

Failure to rehire a discharged draftee or guardsman was made "an unfir labor practice" by the Senate action, a move which would have gotten the National Labor Relations Board after a recalcitrant employer.

The house, considering this was too hard on the employer and having been out all session to shave rather than add to the power of the NLRB, knocked out all reference to "unfair labor practices" leaving men refused reemployment recourse only to the courts ,a far different thing. Similar action undoubtedly will be taken by the House committee when it acts on the draft bill.

Under the House action, United States attorneys' offices throughout the country would handle all job-refusal cases, greatly expanding their duties. Final action is expected to be taken on the rehiring provision by a joint Senate-House Conference Committee this week.

Difficulties visualized under the job-guarantee rule are expected to be great, whatever the final terms of the bill. What is a change of circumstance affecting the employer which would make it impossible or unreasonable for him to rehire an employe? What of the person hired in place of the man during his year's military service? Would not there be discrimination in cases of union members in some plants?

The application of the pending "Soldiers and Sailors Civil Relief Bill" would be even more far reaching and immediate. It seeks to assure men called to the colors against loss from their inability to pay life insurance premiums, taxes, rent, and payment on homes and installment contracts, carry on law suits, as well as complete homestead rights, mining claims and loss on mineral leases.

Landlords could not seek eviction or distress of men failing to pay their rent on dwellings occupied by their dependents and renting for less than $80 a month, except upon leave of a court which may stay proceedings for three months before eviction. This proviso would not have great application immediately as the War Department plans to exempt draftees with dependents. There might be Guardsmen and Reservists affected, however.

Collateral sales of automobiles, furniture, jewelry, radios, etc. so common today, however, would be affected in countless thousands of cases. Vendors of such goods would be barred from repossessing such goods on default of an installment except after court action. A fine and imprisonment is provided for anyone disobeying this proviso.

Upon application to judicial procedure in such cases, the court might order the repayment of prior installments as a condition of the vendor retaking possession, order a stay of proceedings until the man completes his military service or make any other disposition of the case. Somewhat similar rules are laid down for sales of real property and mortgage cases.

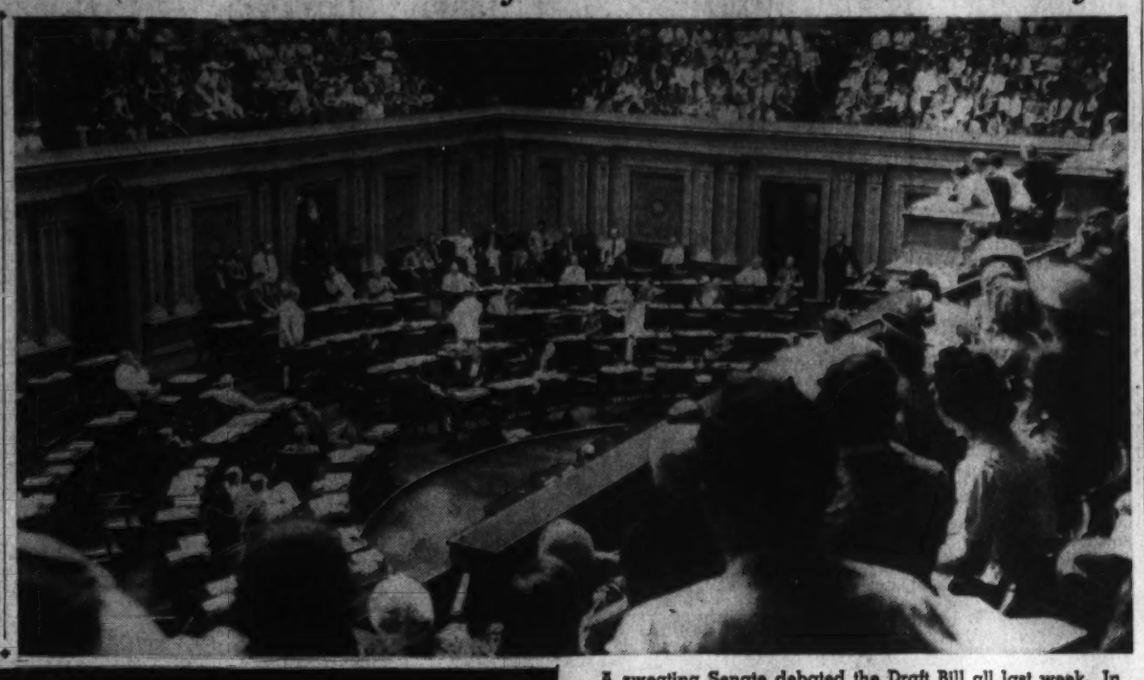
As to life insurance premiums, policies up to $5,000 would not be permitted to lapse during a man's military service, due to his inability to pay them out of his meager Army pay. Instead the Veterans Administration would guarantee the payment of such premiums, though the companies would collect no cash. Detailed rules covering procedure as to insurance cases are laid down in the lengthy complicated bill.

The tax collector, also, is stayed during the period of military service, as are law suits to which the man is a party. No default judgments of any kind may be taken unless the plaintiff makes affidavit that the defendant is not in military service.

This is the picture being disclosed to the country as the Senate approaches a vote on the conscription bill. Awakening realization of the far-reaching effect of the program has produced such a reaction in Congress that the chances are a little better than even that the Maloney compromise plan will be adopted this week instead of the Burke-Wadsworth measure, whereas a few weeks ago Administration forces had votes aplenty to pass the bill.

The Maloney substitute would provide for the immediate registration of some 12,000,000 American men between the ages of 21 and 30 inclusive, but delay any actual draft until January 1, pending an intensive campaign for voluntary recruits. If sufficient volunteers had been enlisted by then, there would be no conscription.

The Guard mobilization measure, should become law sometime next week. It empowers the President to call out about 396,000 Guardsmen and Army reservists for a year's training. They could be employed anywhere in the Western Hemisphere, American possessions, or the Philippines.



A sweating Senate debated the Draft Bill all last week. In the picture above, Senator Wheeler (Dem., Montana), explains some point to the grave-looking Senator Burke (Dem., Nebraska), while Senator Ashurst (Dem., Arizona), stands near the center aisle, awaiting his turn to ask a question. In the packed galleries, women, many the mothers and wives of draft eligibles, form the great majority of the audience. Lining the walls of the chamber are interested Congressmen and clerks of the Senate, while the unusually well-filled Diplomatic Gallery (above the clock) is testimony to the world-wide interest in the debated measure.

Before the House Military Affairs Committee (left), Brig. Gen. William E. Shedd, Assistant Chief of Staff (left), says something that evidently amuses Chairman May (Dem., Kentucky), during his testimony. Gen. Shedd last week revealed that the Army had discarded its original plan to have 900,000 men in uniform by October 1. Revamped schedules, testified Gen. Shedd, call for the 900,000-strength quota by next January.

D. C. Naval Reserve Awaits Admiral's Inspection Tuesday

Efforts Made to Better High Records Set In Past; J. Leland Cardwell Promoted Lieutenant Commander in Medical Corps

The local battalion of the Naval Reserve has been rushing preparation for an admiral's inspection which is scheduled for Tuesday evening. Lieut W. Croft Jennings, battalion commander, has arranged the drill schedule over the past few weeks so as to provide the maximum in preparedness for this inspection, including a general bag inspection by the division commanding officers last Tuesday. This bag inspection also provided the division officers with an opportunity to see that the men are squared away for the coming September training cruise with regard to their clothing and equipment. At past admiral's inspections the local battalion has received excellent marks, but the officers are making every effort to better past records.

With only three drills remaining before the training cruise, all efforts are being made to have all officers and men fully qualified and to fill ranks depleted by the large number of men who have volunteered for active duty. This has placed an especially heavy load on the officers of the medical corps, who must see that all men are in good physical shape and have received the requisite vaccinations and inoculations.

Lieut. J. Leland Cardwell, of the Reserve Medical Corps, has recently been promoted to lieutenant commander.

Division commanding officers are also taking all possible steps to see that enlisted men who are ready for promotion are officially moved up to their new ratings before the cruise. New recruits in the battalion have been unusually heavy during recent weeks, and these men must be outfitted and familiarized with naval routine. Under a new ruling by the Navy Department, recruits are not required to have attended a specified number of drills to qualify for a training cruise.

The local battalion is scheduled to leave the Washington Navy Yard September 7 aboard three destroyers for a two-week cruise down the Atlantic coast, putting in at Charleston, S. C., September 14 for week-end leave.

The District of Columbia is supplying its full quota of recruits for the new program inaugurated by the Navy Department for training reserve ensigns, according to Commander A. B. McCrary, U. S. N. (retired), director of naval reserve for the District. Twenty recruits from Washington and vicinity are being sent for the next training cruise. They will report in New York August 19 for a brief training period aboard the U. S. S. Wyoming. Those making satisfactory marks during this training cruise will be made midshipmen in the Naval Reserve and will undergo further training ashore. Those passing the full course will be commissioned as reserve ensigns of the line.

Third Army Troops Remarkably Free From Sickness

Out of approximately 38,000 men now assembled in the area of Alexandria, La., less than one half of one per cent are now sick, a low figure under normal weather conditions, and considered very unusual under the exceedingly adverse weather prevailing in the area during this past week.

A total number of 188 cases are now hospitalized at Camp Beauregard. None of these are infectious or contagious diseases; practically all being minor respiratory cases. It was explained that all sick cases, except those considered so exceedingly minor that their return to duty within 24 hours is indicated, are evacuated to the hospital at Camp Beauregard which is prepared to give excellent care under the most modern conditions to all soldiers becoming sick or suffering any injury. The hospital is complete in every detail to care for all medical and surgical cases.

The 38,000 troops, now concentrating to participate in the Third Army maneuvers, are those actually assembled in the Alexandria area. That figure does not include those forces at Camp Shelby, Miss., now undergoing preliminary training before proceeding to the maneuver area. More than 65,000 officers and men are expected to participate in the maneuvers, August 15-21.

British Archies Force Nazis To Alter Air Raid Tactics

Teamwork Between Ground Batteries And Fighter Planes Breaks Up Mass Attacks To Forays by Strings of Dive Bombers

By Drew Middleton

London (Correspondence of the Associated Press).—The antiaircraft barrage and teamwork between ground gunners and fighter pilots have changed Germany's air-raid tactics from mass formations to forays by strings of dive bombers.

Scorned by pilots in the last war and in this as "archies" and "old ack ack," antiaircraft guns have had their effectiveness greatly increased by long months of inactivity last winter when the gunners spent countless hours in practice.

As a result the German air onslaught has been met by an increasingly effective "channeling" of antiaircraft fire which artillery officers say pushes the bombers away from the targets and destroys an "increasingly high percentage of raiders.

The problem of distinguishing friendly planes from German raiders, which appeared grave at the start of the war, has been surmounted by ceaseless schooling in shapes and flying methods of the German warplanes.

Every gunner, searchlight batteryman and observation officer has a card showing the size and shape of all German aircraft at different heights and under varying conditions.

To accustom gun and light operators to the appearance of German planes at night, theaters have been rigged up with screens on which dim silhouettes of various German planes are projected.

British planes also flash secret recognition signals to ground troops.

An unspoken agreement between the fighters and gunners gives the former command of the situation when they attack a German formation. If the fighters chase a plane out of formation, every gun in the neighborhood is trained on it.

German tactics in day raiding has been to fly in close-packed formation at the fairly low altitudes of 9,000 or 8,000 feet toward the target and then to string out. Junkers planes slope toward the target and usually start to dive from a height of about 4,500 to 5,000 feet.

Antiaircraft performs a dual role against them. First the big guns try to keep the approaching squadron as high as possible. Then light ordinance tries to blow each plane out of the sky at two brief, vulnerable moments—the start of the dive and when the pilot pulls his craft out of the dive.

Britain's 3.7 gun is the backbone of her antiaircraft. It has a ceiling of 40,000 feet—or better than 7½ miles—but it is most effective in ranges of 20,000 to 35,000 feet.

Its shell, complete with nose and cartridge case, is 42½ inches tall, weighs 27 to 28 pounds and costs about $21 each.

The 4.5 gun, which is not so mobile and has a slower rate of fire than the 3.7's 12 a minute has an even longer range and even greater destructive power on explosion.

Shells for both guns have a time fuse set to explode at the height of the raiding aircraft. Their explosive power is such that a plane within 20 yards of the burst, if not hit by shell fragments, will be shaken by the concussion.

Bofors guns, originally made in Sweden and now produced in England, are the chief reliance against dive-bombers, seconded by the fire of machine-gun batteries.

The Bofors have a rate fire of 20 rounds a minute and can hurl a 2-pound shell—fired in clips of four—to a height of 3,000 feet. Unlike the larger missiles, these shells explode on contact.

The Bren machine gun, originated in Czecho-Slovakia and now manufactured by the British, also has been used against dive-bombers—with notable success, the army says.

Heavy machine guns also are used principally on defense trawlers and naval vessels.

30-Ton Navy Bomber Ranks As Deadliest

Pacific Squadron To Get Six; Craft Have 5,000-Mile Range

By Ed Thomas
United Press Staff Correspondent.

San Diego, Calif., Aug. 17.—A four-motored long-range patrol that tips the scales at a shade more than 30 tons and has an inside floor space equal to that of a five-room house will be delivered to Squadron VP13 at North Island soon.

The huge flying boat, built by the Consolidated Aircraft Corporation in San Diego, is the first of six similar flying dreadnaughts that will be taxied across the bay to North Island Naval Air Station in the next few months.

When the six ships have been delivered, Squadron VP13, with its personnel of 100 pilots and mechanics, will be the strongest long-range patrol arm of the United States air fleet.

Have Wing Span of 115 Feet

The Navy hasn't released any official data relative to the size or power of the new ships, but figures released by the Consolidated officials reveal the tremendous size and potentialities these air boats will have.

The ships have a wing span of 115 feet, an overall length of 80 feet, and their height, from the keel of the hull to the top of the wing, is 25 feet.

The ships have a cruising range of nearly 5,000 miles, and with a full crew of nine men will be capable of speeds in excess of 200 miles an hour. They will be the fastest aircraft of their type in the world today.

With a load of several tons of bombs it is easy to see that a squadron of six of these huge silver ships will become one of the most powerful air armadas in the world.

Streamlined into the single wing of the PB2Y2, as the new ship is numbered by Consolidated officials, will be four Pratt & Whitney radial air-cooled motors, each of which can generate 1,500 horsepower.

Eagerly Await First Ship

Over at North Island, Lieut. Commander S. B. Cooke, commander of Squadron VP13 since is was commissioned early in July, is eagerly awaiting the delivery of the first ship.

For several months the squadron personnel has had an experimental PB2Y2 to "practice on" so as to familiarize themselves with the handling of the ship in the air.

This experimental ship will not be discarded, as most smaller experimental ships are, after delivery of the first boat from the plant. The reason? It is valued at nearly $500,000, so the Navy undoubtedly will find some usefulness for it after its days as an experimental trainer are over.

The experimental ship has performed "excellently," according to Cooke.

In fact, the ship has performed in such grand style that Cooke and his men are awaiting the arrival of the "real articles" with the anxiety of boys on Christman eve.

Step one in the conversion of a civilian into a soldier. John Average Man registers, along with 12,000,000 other eligibles, and thus quickly becomes a candidate for military service. In a few weeks . . .

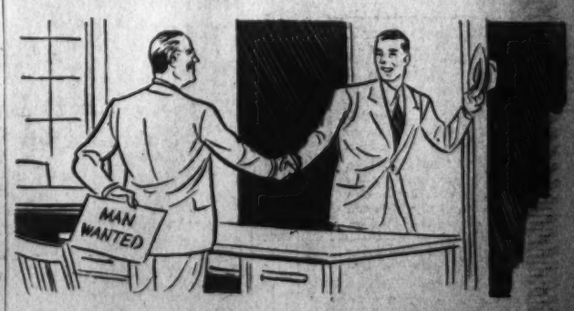
He is examined by the Draft Board. Having successfully qualified in a series of physical examinations, intelligence tests and other red tape, John s pronounced fit for service. He is summarily drafted, outfitted . . .

And packed off to camp, a cog in the huge defense machine which the United States is building. At the camp he begins an intensive course in military training, living the rugged life of a soldier. Meanwhile, at home, he leaves behind . . .

His landlord, who is first puzzled, then angry at his vanished tenant. But Johnnie doesn't care. His unpaid bills cause no headaches to him. He's "In the Army now, and not behind the plow." Other creditors, such as the salesman who sold John his new car . . .

Angrily take their cases to court. But how can John keep up his installments on a new salary of $30 per month, most of which goes to the support of his family? A more serious matter is brought up by John's insurance agent . . .

Who is referred to the Veteran's Bureau. Now, above all times, he argues, our young man should provide for his family in the event of his death. In active military service—not exactly probable, but definitely possible—the risks are great. Another problem . . .



For Johnnie is his job. When he left his work, his position had to be filled. Did he say goodby forever when he took his leave of the boss? Or will he be able to get his job back when he returns? Johnnie's future is not rosy-hued by any means.

Service Sidelights

Young Soldier's Letter Reveals Guard's Need of Mobilization

By John G. Norris.

NORRIS

The best argument we've seen in favor of calling out the National Guard for a year's training was contained in a letter received this week from the "front." Not the so-called, no longer existent "American frontier on the Rhine" or the English Channel, but from the thin khaki-clad line in northern New York, where more than 100,000 militiamen and regulars are defending the Nation against a mythical enemy.

Received by a member of Congress from a young kinsman in the Guard, it probably influenced more votes—or should have—than any of the long-winded oratorical efforts of the two-day debate on the House floor. Congressmen had heard extended testimony as to the state of the National Guard and the need for a year's training to whip it into an efficient fighting force from ranking brass-hats of the War Department general staff. Military experts and columnists lately turned military authorities had urged the move in the press and over the radio.

Here, however, was first-hand evidence of how ready the militia is to stop Hitler's legions if need be, from the lips of a Pennsylvania Guard buck private getting his first taste of Army life.

"If we ever accomplish anything as an artillery regiment," he wrote, "it will be said we did it from scratch. That's where we are now, or a little behind it.

"We have brought about four three-inch guns and, so far as I can see, only one 50-calibre machine gun for the regiment to practice with. The shave-tails working on those pieces look like a kid with his first erector set when they start mounting them.

"Salutes are given about as often as free ten dollar bills. That itself isn't so bad, but it is a bad sign. It means punk discipline.

"Last night I was on guard duty, assigned to a relief detail. We went up to a post and couldn't see the sentry. Looked all around. No sentry. Finally almost stepped on him in the grass near his post.

"'Thell's the idea?" demanded the corporal of the guard, "Sleepin' on yer post?"

"'Oh, I wasn't sleepin', I was watchin' you all the time,' was the reply.

"'Whynell didn't you stand up, then?'

"'Say, buddy, you'd lie down, too, if your legs hurt as much as mine,' the sentry answered.

"Then we relieved another sentry who, when asked to repeat his orders, cupped his hand behind his ear, and said 'Say it again, I don't hear good.' I guess everybody in camp knew his orders by the time he got them.

"Haven't had my pants off since Sunday. Yes, once, I went in swimming in Lake Ontario. It was grand.

"Don't get the idea I'm griping or not enjoying myself. It's great fun, but I would like to get the idea across that this army is by no means a finished product.

"At least three-quarters of us can't handle a 37-millimeter rifle.

"A New York regiment, the 212th, is shooting at a sleeve target behind an airplane now. They haven't hit it yet, but I guess they've scared the pilot plenty.

"Regards to all. I'll see you when I get home—if we get home."

The truth is that modern armies can't be made up of soldiers who are lawyers and shoe clerks 50 weeks out of the year and army men for 15 days. Regular Army officers used to say of the National Guard of World War days that it had the best enlisted men in the world—and the worst officers. The men as a general rule were better educated and more intelligent than the Regulars of those days, while politics too often governed the selection of officers. Then, too, most of the Guardsmen had been hardened and trained on the Mexican border in 1916.

Today, the officers of the Guard are miles ahead of their predecessors of 25 years ago. The men are considered equally good—when hardened and trained. But modern war is so much more complex, and some of the world's armies so thoroughly drilled that green troops are worse than useless.

Week-End Vagabond

By Rae Lewis

Southern Maryland roads provide a treasure hunt for vagabonds. Every few miles there is a little side road down which you can adventure, sure of finding some pot of gold at its end. It may be an old, old Patuxent wharf for picture possibilities, or a breeze-swept eyrie on the bay, or an historical gem.

No one has ever defined "Southern Maryland" for me, but I have decided it is that section lying south of a line drawn between Washington and Annapolis, so we are right on its brink. Solomons is at the tip of the peninsula between the Patuxent River and Chesapeake Bay. It is only 70 miles away, but the road seems unexplored, and there are more side roads leading away to the river or the bay than there is time to explore in one day.

After leaving Washington, Route 4, through Upper Marlboro, you bear right a little beyond to a road connecting with Route 416. Upper Marlboro, by the way, was founded in 1706 and has been a tobacco town ever since, and tobacco auctions are still held there. Route 416 joins Route 2 from Annapolis, the main road, and there is shortly a right turn to Lower Marlboro, which used to be an important port on the Patuxent.

The countryside is covered with beautiful woods, fields of corn and small gardens. Dominating the scene are the tobacco fields, just now coming into bloom with spikes of little pink trumpets standing above the orderly bouquets of tobacco leaves. This crop is prized—it's a real money crop—and so every field looks freshly washed and curried. Down in this country, among the pines and pinoaks, one begins to see fine holly on some of the private property.

From time to time you will glimpse some beautiful old home set back in a grove of trees, probably on a little eminence overlooking the water or a pretty valley. They are all private homes and not open to the public except during Garden Week, but you will enjoy their fine architecture and charming settings.

Although other parts of Maryland lay strong claims to the famous names of Thomas Johnson, first State Governor of Maryland, and of Roger Brooke Taney, they were both born on this peninsula, the latter not far from Huntingtown.

Prince Frederick, named for one of the English princes, used to be called Williams Old Fields long ago. Now it is a pretty little street of homes which becomes a beehive of activity on court days, for it has been the seat of Calvert County since the early eighteenth century.

In Prince Frederick, one of the charming side roads leads right to the Patuxent. When this road forks it will go left to Bowens and Adeline, and on the right to the ferry across the river. This doll-sized ferry has no top and no sides, but is a sturdy, tug-like conveyance with a motor and holds two cars to take you to Benedict, across the Patuxent. We crossed on it and just as we landed some fish were being taken out of a boat returned to this fishing resort from somewhere nearby. I cannot recognize any fish at even ten paces, but these looked large, long and heavy and were attracting plenty of interest.

But let us not digress too much from this main road to Solomons. Happily, all these Maryland roads are clearly marked and often, so there's no trouble finding the side roads. Further, the roads are good. At least I found them so and simply did not try any sand and only a few dirt roads. There are some remains of the old corduroy roads and for short stretches this can be like driving over a row of rolling pins.

In Port Republic a road veers to the right again to Broome Island, a flat, marshy area beloved of fishermen. A branch of this leads to Mackall's Landing, and overlooking this deserted wharf is Thomas Johnson's birthplace. All over this section are signs leading to wharves or landings because formerly boats from Baltimore used to make regular trips, bringing passengers and freight to the river communities in the days when rivers were the highways.

Not far beyond Port Republic a road leads left to Kenwood Beach, on Chesapeake Bay. Here you can see the cliffs of Calvert, extending down the bay from Chesapeake Beach, and which Capt. Smith himself noticed in 1608 and marked on his map. Chesapeake Bay seems part of Maryland, for it provides some 3,000 miles of tidal shoreline. This largest inlet on the Atlantic is a tremendous commercial and sportsmen's area, and it is embraced in the arms of southern Maryland and the Eastern Shore.

Middleham Chapel, with 1748 in its weathered old red brick, is not far above Solomons. The road ends at Solomons, a picturesque town only 75 years old. It is at the mouth of the Patuxent before it enters the bay, and dropped the "Island" from its name when the mainland causeway was built.

Solomons has one of the largest natural harbors in the world, and there are anchored there four ships which saw service in the last war, as well as several large groups of ocean-going vessels withdrawn from service because of the present war. tI is a fishing and shipbuilding center and the place is alive with boats, either on the reaches of the river or lined up in the landlocked harbor. The Chesapeake Biological Laboratory is located here and assembles valuable data on marine life in the area.

Record Crowds Enjoy Fishing At Ocean City

Dogs to Have Day At Show Tuesday; Water Races Labor Day

Ocean City, N. J., Aug. 17.—With the record crowd of the resort's history already here, a constant stream of new arrivals keep pouring into the eight miles of seaside city. Fishing continues good, with many of the party boats reporting catches ranging from 800 to 1,500 fish, while the surf-casters who line the upper end of the beach are kept busy with the weakies and kings that feed just beyond the break. The fishing interest of Ocean City, however, is being focused upon deep-sea fishing, 30 or 40 miles at sea, where the marlin and tuna test the angler's skill.

Tuesday will be dogs' day in Convention Hall. The dog show will be sponsored by the Northfield Kennel Club, a sanctioned branch of the American Kennel Club. The judges will include Mrs. Paul Bradley, of Atlantic City, who will pass upon the merits of the toy and working group; James Mitchell, of Trenton, N. J., the sporting group, and Charles Allen, of Cedarbrook, who will judge the best of the show. There will be a children's handling group open to all boys and girls. In charge of this feature is Thomas Scholler, of Northfield, who will judge solely on the child's ability to handle the dog.

With Labor Day in the offing the city is excited over the world's inboard motorboat championship race, in which many European and South American boats will contend, and the Pan-American hydroplane championships. Both of these international events are scheduled for September 2, and will be run over the famous triangular course of the Ocean City Yacht Club. It is expected that Secretary of State Hull, who is greatly interested in the hydroplane, together with many of the high officials of the Pan-American countries, will occupy the front row on the spacious veranda of the yacht club. With the entire course visible from any point along the bayfront, many thousands of spectators will view these thrilling events.

Thousands View Bridge Built In Million Years

A million years to build a highway bridge, and with not one single hour of human labor in it! Thirty-six thousand tons of stone poised in midair 215 feet above a mountain stream below! Was ever the like to be seen on this planet?

This is true of Natural Bridge in Virginia's famous Shenandoah Valley 40 miles north of Roanoke. Thousands have viewed it with wonder and gone away stricken with awe.

"The Bridge of God"—that's what the Monocan Indians called it long before white men appeared in this land. Hadn't the Great Father set the bridge before their people just when a passageway was needed to help them escape from their enemies across the deep abyss? So legend has it—and so they worshiped it.

Owned first by the English crown head, deeded to Thomas Jefferson, surveyed by George Washington (his initials and surveyor's cross may still be seen), visited by many notables, Natural Bridge has stirred deep interest abroad as well as in America. John Marshall named it "God's greatest miracle in stone" and Henry Clay described it as "the bridge not made by hands, that spans a river, carries a highway and makes two mountains one."

Remarkable and impressive by day, at night the great stone arch becomes a profound and breathtaking pageant, with hidden lights, voices and music taking you back into the eternal ages. The highway it carries is "the great valley pike" (U. S. 11)—"race course of armies" during the Civil War.

Rich in stories and relics of the early days, Natural Bridge may well be the starting point for a fascinating tour. To the north but a short distance are the famous caverns, historic shrines, resorts and scenic wonders of the Shenandoah Valley. Eastward a few hours' drive lie Williamsburg, Jamestown, Yorktown, Fredericksburg, Charlottesville and Richmond. Not far away are Appomattox, Manassas and New Market, the scars of battle now healed. The Shenandoah National Park, with its popular scenic highway, the Skyline Drive, await your visits within 38 miles.

Hunters May Take Guns Into Canada

No difficulty will be experienced by American sportsmen in taking their own guns and a "reasonable amount" of ammunition on Canadian hunting expeditions this fall, according to advices received in all Canadian National Railways offices in the United States from Canadian government officials.

The new regulations provide that American sportsmen make application either to the Canadian commissioner of customs of commissioner, Royal Canadian Mounted Police, Ottawa, giving credentials, purpose and duration of stay in Canada, as well as port of entry, together with description of the firearms.

Revolvers, however, will not be admitted except for recognized competitions. Permits, as granted, will be sent to the Canadian port of entry and sportsmen advised to claim permits at border points indicated.

Too Many Flowers

Henry Shaplin, for 70 years a well known flower grower of Woking, England, stipulated in his will: "No flowers at my funeral." The request was heeded.

Baby Parade and Carnival Scheduled Friday At Wildwood, New Jersey, Seashore Resort

Getting the summer's sun at Wildwood-By-The-Sea, N. J.

Wildwood, N. J., Aug. 17.—Wildwood will have its thirtieth annual baby parade and carnival Friday.

The parade, which will consist of seven divisions, will get underway at 11 a. m.

Division A will be for baby coaches and gocarts; Division B, for doll coaches; Division C, for decorated express wagons; Division D, for custume and fancy dress in college colors; Division E, for costumes in burlesque; Division F, for floats, attendants in costume; Division G is the pet division; twins triplets and family groups will form another division.

Seven bands will participate in the parade.

An innovation this year will be that cash prizes will be awarded instead of cups.

The coronation of the queen and king will be held on Hunts Ocean Pier on Thursday at 8:30 p. m.

The same night the Wildwood Golf Club will hold its annual supper dance at the clubhouse at Burleigh. Entertainment will include well-known vaudeville artists. This is to be followed by dancing. A buffet supper will be served.

Acoma Indians To Celebrate Year's Harvest

Santa Fe, N. Mex., Aug. 17.—More than a thousand New Mexico Indians will return to their old tribal home on St. Stephen's Day, September 2, just to dance and celebrate fiesta, according to the New Mexico State Tourist Bureau.

Coming back from their farms, from jobs on the railroad and other places, the Acoma Indians will stream up the narrow, rocky trail to their famous "Sky City" in western New Mexico to join in the ancient ceremonial dances which celebrate each year's harvest.

Although old Acoma, which perches atop a sheer-sided mesa rising abruptly 400 feet from the surrounding plain, is nearly deserted now, most of the Indians retain apartments at the ancient tribal home for this celebration.

Most of the Acoma Indians live at Acomita, a new pueblo 12 miles north of the Rock of Acoma. Here they are closer to their fields and flocks, for they have been a sedentary and agrarian people since long before the coming of the white man.

When Francisco Vasquez de Coronado came to New Mexico in 1540, he found a village of 200 homes, ranging from two to four stories in height, atop Acoma mesa. The conquistador was given a friendly welcome to the rocky citadel, but less than 60 years later these Indians staged a furious revolt against the Spaniards.

Illinois Central To Add 3 Flyers

Taking a long step forward and one which places its passenger services high up on the list of railroads operating streamlined trains, the Illinois Central System will have three more modernistic speedsters gliding up and down various portions of its line within the next few months, according to H. B. Bolton, general agent here.

Most important of all is the inauguration of streamlined service between Chicago and Miami by way of Birmingham and Jacksonville, on a schedule of approximately 29½ hours. In addition, there are new Diesel trains of the most novel design and of brilliant exterior hues, contemplated for fast turn-around service between Chicago and Champaign, Ill. (site of the University of Illinois) and between New Orleans and Jackson, Miss. The color motif will be those of the State Universities of the respective States served by the new streamliners, Bolton announced.

Cape May Makes Plea For Autumn Visitors

Cape May, N. J., Aug. 17.—"Come to Cape May during the best part of the year, late August, September and October."

That is the invitation issued today by Cape May's city commission as it launched a move to extend the resort vacation period through the "golden days" of early autumn.

With the approach of September and Labor Day, normal end of the vacation season, efforts are being made by Cape May as well as other New Jersey resorts to lengthen the period so that vacationists may become familiar with the ideal conditions which exist at this resort during late summer and early autumn.

Ocean City Skeet Shoot Set for Aug. 24, 25

Ocean City, Md., Aug. 17.—The fourth annual Ocean City, (Md.), skeet shoot will be held here Saturday and Sunday, August 24 and 25, on the local skeet club's grounds, it has just been announced by the association's secretary. The feature event of the two-day matches will be a shoot-off of 100 skeet targets, Sunday, for the Ocean City championship. This will be preceded Saturday by the Ocean City special, a 50 skeet target heat (all bore).

Both resort visitors and the general shooting public have been invited to participate in the contests.

Argentina and Meat

The descendants of the early settlers of Argentina are maintaining the reputation of being the greatest meat eaters in the world. During the early days the gauchos and other denizens of the pampas lived almost entirely upon the flesh of their vast herds of cattle.

Cash Prizes to Be Awarded Winners In Seven Divisions

Schooners Taking Dudes on Cruises Along Maine Coast

Camden, Maine, Aug. 17.—Windjammer cruises aboard old-time all sail schooners will be offered for $32.00 a week in September, reports Capt. Frank Swift, of that port.

The schooners, there are four of them, sail from Camden every Monday morning for cruises among the many islands of Penobscot Bay. The passengers—who are also the crew—may lend a hand in hoisting anchor and making sail and everyone is expected to do his trick at the wheel.

The holds of these schooners have been provided with cozy little cabins. There is a big, general cabin adjoining the galley where a professional sea cook presides. These "seagoing dude ranches," as they have been called, attract the ladies as well as the men, and very smart they look in their seagoing togs.

The weeks of early fall are the best for cruising off the Maine coast with good breezes and fine, dependable sailing weather.

Skytop Club Revue Will Be Staged Friday, Saturday

Special Dispatch to The Post

Skytop, Pa., Aug. 17.—Rehearsing has begun for the Skytop Club's annual revue, "Skyrockets," next Friday and Saturday. The show, which will be gayly costumed, will have new tunes, skits and several dance numbers. Professionals in the leading roles will be supported by a large cast of younger members of the Skytop summer colony.

Several choruses have been written for the show by Edmund Dawes, Skytop's sports director. Dorothy Waldo Phillips, recreational director, has charge of the affair, the proceeds of which will go to charity.

The third of a series of round-robin putting tournaments between Pocono Manor, Buck Hill and Skytop teams will be held here Tuesday.

Other events of the week are an overnight hike for children enrolled in the Camp-in-the-Clouds, a bowling tournament, a breakfast picnic for the horseback riders and an evening steak roast on Skytop Mountain.

2,000 to Dance At Va. Beach Charity Affair

Virginia Beach, Va., Aug. 17.—Highlighting the social calendar here next week will be the gala benefit dance on Monday night for the Infant Sanitorium, which will be staged on the Show Boat deck at the Cavalier Beach Club, with an anticipated assemblage of about 2,000 guests.

With the entire resort in festive mood, many of the cottage colonists will add color to the program by entertaining with dinner parties in their homes. Preceding this favorite annual charity affair, Buddy Rogers and his orchestra will offer a special program of music and entertainment arranged for this occasion.

Climaxing their annual three-day meeting, which will be held tomorrow, Monday and Tuesday in Norfolk, the Virginia State Elks Association will join other colonists on Tuesday night at the supper dance at the Cavalier Beach Club in this resort. The Norfolk Lodge, No. 38, B. P. O. E., of which O. W. Story is the exalted ruler, will be hosts on this occasion. Wiley W. Wood, Norfolk, will be the entertainment chairman.

The Brighter Side
By Damon Runyon

Mr. Joe Turp writes:
Brooklyn August 16.

Dear sir last night my wife Ethel ses Joe do you know about the draft? I ses do you mean the thing they are talking about in Washington to grab guys for the Army? Ethel ses yes that is it. I ses certainly I know about it sweetheart but don't let it bother you because if they start grabbing they are going to grab guys who are not married.

Ethel ses O I know that Joe and it is the most wonderful thing that ever happened in the world for this neighborhood. It is the most wonderful thing that ever happened for my girl friend Freckles Dickson. She was over here this afternoon Joe and you never saw such a change in a girl in your life.

I ses has she changed any of those spots on her kisser baby? Ethel ses why Joe I think thats mean to mention Freckles Dicksons freckles. She can't help them no matter how many different lotions she uses and besides I think they make her look cute. I ses well Ethel if you think freckles make somebody else look cute why do you have a catfit every time you get a little dinky spot on your pan from the sun yourself?

Ethel ses O thats different. Freckles are not becoming to me but can you imagine Freckles Dickson without them? I ses no baby I can't. I ses I have known Freckles ever since we were kids and I guess I would not recognize her if she came around without those spots on her. I ses she has always had them and Eddie Clancy with her all her life and why is the draft a wonderful thing for her sweets?

Ethel ses why on account of Eddie Clancy. They have been going together for years and she has always expected to marry him but he never ses a word to her about it until the other day when he saw it in the paper that they are talking of making fellows who are not married go into the Army. Then he asked her the first time Joe. It was in the subway when she was coming home from work. He was getting very romantic too when the train lurched and threw him into a big fat Italian fellow and they got in a terrible argument. He has asked her five times since Joe.

I ses wait a minute Ethel. I ses do you mean to tell me that Eddie Clancy has had to ask Freckles more than once to marry him without getting a quick answer? Ethel ses thats right Joe. She is holding him off. I ses whats the idea anyway? I ses Ethel a dame who is no better looking than Freckles cannot afford to be taking chances. I ses besides you ses yourself she has always expected to marry Eddie though I don't see that he is any bargain so why hold him off now?

Ethel ses because she is having fun Joe. There are two other fellows in this neighborhood who want to marry her too and they are all giving her a big rush and taking her some place every night so she is having a fine time.

Joe she ses every time she opens her door now one of those fellows is sitting out in front waiting to take her some place and generally it is Eddie. And she used to have to go looking everywhere for him when she wanted to see him because often he would hide from her. Yes Joe the draft is the most wonderful thing that ever happened for Freckles.

I ses see here Ethel. I ses maybe the draft has nothing to do with it. I ses maybe Eddie and those other guys are after Freckles because they have just noticed something about her that appeals to them. Ethel ses for instance what Joe? I ses well I don't know just what baby but it could be something. Ethel ses O you are always making excuses for fellows Joe. Don't you think it is very peculiar that a girl who had had only one fellow in ten years and always had to be hunting for him suddenly finds herself with three of them?

I ses well all right Ethel whatever it is lets be glad for Freckles sake. I ses she always looked kind of lonesome to me but I think she ought to marry Eddie Clancy because they look natural together. Ethel ses O she will Joe after she has worried him awhile. She has asked me to be her matron of honor but Freckles ses if she was five years younger she would stay single and keep those fellows hopping. Joe it is going to be lots of fun for the girls who are not married because think of all the attention they will get.

I ses O I suppose you are sorry you are married? Ethel ses no Joe are you? I ses you bet I am not baby.

Yours Truly,
Joe Turp.

Ferns Lovely In Cool Places In the Summer

Many Native Varieties Exhibited in New York Show 2 Years Ago

By Katherine Barrett Pozer

Ferns are associated with so many pleasant places and occasions that it is not surprising that they are being included more and more in home garden planning. In hot midsummer weather they remind one of the cool depths of the woodland with its streams and pools. With ferns it is not difficult to recapture the woodland picture in even the most limited space, and in consequence they have been favored planting for the shady garden and as the accepted planting for pools. But in spite of their general use for this purpose, few gardeners have until recently realized the many varieties which are available and which would add greatly to general planting.

Attention of the gardening public was called to the many native varieties at the New York Flower Show two years ago, when in the Garden Club of America section the splendid collection of native ferns were shown by Mr. and Mrs. Edward Thurston. More than 60 varieties were exhibited. All of them were native to New England and the Middle Atlantic States. The exhibit was beautifully staged in the manner of a raised woodland bank, the ferns graduated in height, from the tiniest to the tallest used as background planting. Each variety was carefully labeled and an appeal was made for the growing and naturalizing of ferns in the woods and open spaces of both private grounds and in the protected areas of State parks.

Catalogues List Several Varieties

Thousands of visitors made lists and checked over the many varieties and, no doubt, have since then enjoyed some of the many varieties which came to their attention at that time. But it is possible for anyone who has a place suitable to find a number of varieties listed in the catalogues of almost any nurseryman. Acquiring a better knowledge of fern varieties, one soon finds there are ferns for almost every use—ground covers, clumps planted in massed effects or with flowers, and the tall varieties for background planting, where their sturdy leaves offer a splendid foil for both the green garden or the flower bed. The hardy Maidenhair, the Adiantum pedatum, is perhaps the favorite of all ferns with Americans generally. Its delicate foliage and black stems are exquisitely beautiful. They are extremely hardy and will increase rapidly in almost any garden soil if leafmold and some sand are included. The recommended mixture for almost all ferns is a quarter sand, a quarter soil and a half leafmold. This mixture will usually give luxurious foliage. The Maidenhair which dies down in winter is particularly good with plantings of bulbs or primroses, as its foliage appears just when the dying foliage of these early things is becoming a problem. By the time primroses are ready to put forth new leaves the Maidenhair is tall enough to allow them the sun and air they need.

Useful for massing on moist banks or in spots where a low ground cover is required is the Bladder fern, the Crystoteris bulbefera. The Royal fern with its yellowish green foliage and golden stems is also moisture loving, as is the lovely Lady fern, which grows to 3 feet in height and likes either sun or shade. For more open spaces there are such ferns as the Hay scented fern which carpets the hills of Vermont, and the graceful New York fern.

Evergreen ferns include the Wood or Christmas fern, which likes a shaded position, and the Spinulosa Woodfern, which requires rich, well-drained soil. A charming small evergreen suitable for rockwork is the Common Polypody, which grows from 4 to 10 inches in height and forms a dense mat when planted 4 to 6 inches apart.

Wild Flowers Allied With Ferns

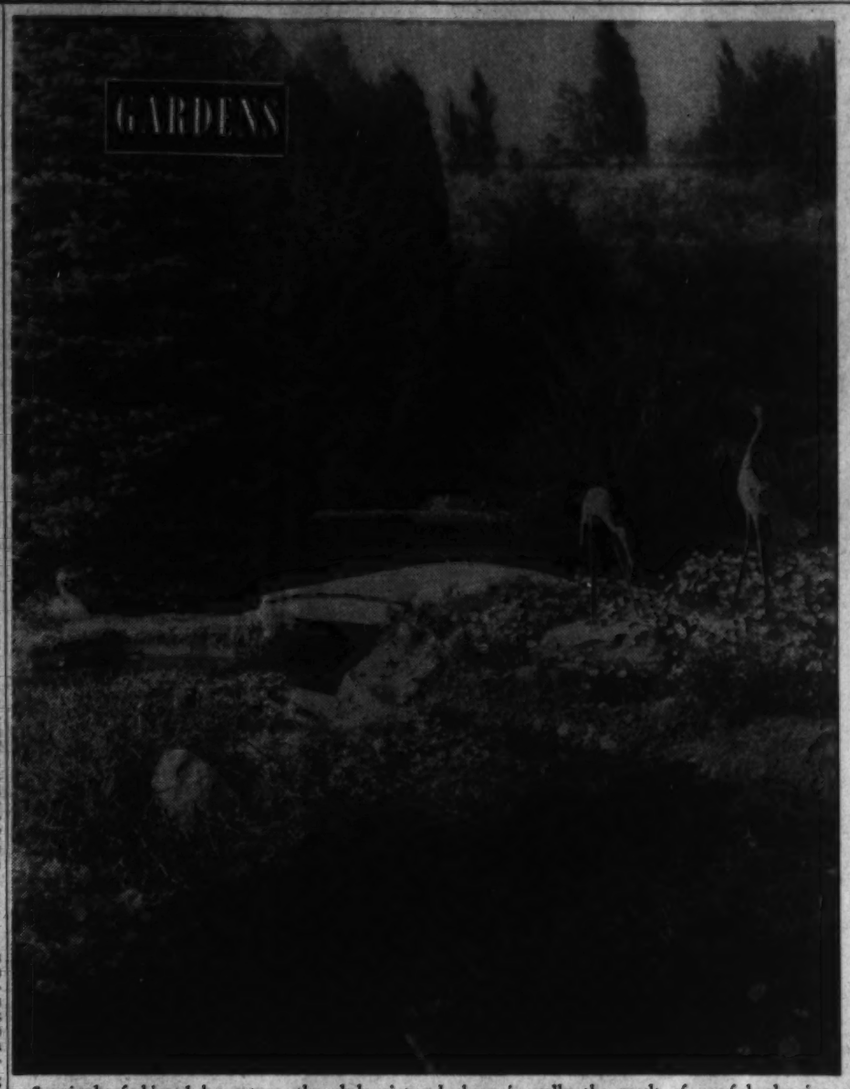
Closely allied to an interest in fern growing is that of growing wild flowers. Thes two are natural companions. One can follow a fancy for wild and native plants along many different lines. This year at the Philadelphia show the wild plant exhibit which proved most popular was the display of medicinal plants by the Bowman's Hill State Wildflower Preserve at Washington's Crossing Park. In this medicinal plant trail the delicate Maidenhair was seen and it was found that it was used for bronchitis. The marginal Woodfern was also in this collection. It was surprising to find such well-loved flowers as the Birdsfoot violet and the delicate hepatica, Jack-in-the-Pulpit and the yellow Ladyslipper among the medicinal plants.

Medicinal plants and their use is a very fascinating study. The novel on this subject written by Sir Harry Johnston some years ago made interesting reading as one followed the the hero in his world-wide search for rare plants which had medicinal value. A more recent book, "Roots, Their Place in Life and Legend," by Vernon Quinn, follows the use of roots from the early days of history. The book is delightfully written and, with its splendid index, makes a very valuable reference book. That people generally are deeply interested in the subject was definitely shown at Philadelphia, where the "Medicinal Plant Trail" was one of the most popular exhibits. It was staged by the Council for the Preservation of Natural Beauty in Pennsylvania.

McGuire Named Carnegie Lecturer In South America

The Carnegie Endowment for International Peace announces that Dr. Constantine E. McGuire, of Washington, has been assigned as visiting Carnegie professor to speak this autumn at leading universities of South America.

Dr. McGuire, who lives at the Cosmos Club, will fly from Miami today for South America. Among the universities where he will lecture are Universidade do Rio de Janeiro, Universidade de Sao Paulo, Universidad Nacional del Paraguay, Universidad de Chile, Universidad Mayor de San Andres at La Paz, Bolivia; Universidad Mayor de San Marcos, Lima, Peru; Universidad Central del Ecuador, Universidad Nacional, of Bogota, Colombia, and Universidad Central Venezuela, Caracas, Venezuela.



Seemingly fashioned by nature, the glade pictured above is really the result of careful planning, with liberal use of wild flowers, which are having a great boom in popularity according to the story at left.

Rose-of-Sharon Can Be Either Boon or Pest, Depending on Use for Which It Is Intended

Its Seeding Habit Can Make It More Bother Than It's Worth

But for Sunny Corner Its Possibilities Are Varied and Many

By Crowell Baynes

Althea, or Rose-of-Sharon—also called the mallow tree and the hollyhock tree—is one of the most useful and adaptable of hardy shrubs. It can also prove one of the thoroughly annoying pests of the garden and can cause a good deal more bother than it is worth.

Botanically, Rose-of-Sharon is hibiscus syriacus, of the mallow family, closely related to the swamp rose mallow from which the large-flowered garden mallows have been bred, and more distinctly related to the hollyhock (Althaea rosea). For a sunny corner well-separated from more carefully cultivated sections of the garden, it is an interesting experiment to start these three relatives and let them fight it out, with occasional interventions with a heavy hoe or a weed hook to give the mallow a chance.

Or there is opportunity for a lovely garden picture made up of a creamy Rose-of-Sharon flanked by two pink mallow growing to nearly 6 feet in height and fully as much in breadth, forming a joint composition roughly an equilateral triangle 15 feet to a side. Where space permits, this makes a charming August picture—perhaps to balance a planting of pink and white phlox in the garden proper.

Serious Fault Is Seeding Habit

The bad feature—and it is a serious fault—is the seeding habit of the Rose-of-Sharon. A gardener who should have known better, suggested it as a quick-growing shrub that would soon furnish shade for a planting of lilies, azaleas and delphiniums that were not happy in full summer sun. The transplanted shrubs furnished the shade within a season or two—and then the trouble began. The shrubs flowered freely, and seeded freely—and germinated all too freely, in spring, in summer and fall. Every month or so, it seemed, there was a full ground cover of newly sprouted Althea plants that called for hand weeding because hoeing would have disturbed the azaleas and lilies. After about two seasons the Rose-of-Sharon went to the refuse heap and even after five years there is still an annual crop of seedlings growing up in the shade of the dogwoods that replaced them as a source of shade.

"Never again !" was the first resolution. But fortunately it was not adhered to rigidly. A few seedlings were allowed to develop away from the cultivated garden, and have proved thoroughly satisfactory. It was merely necessary to prune off shoots that started from the front and back of the stem, and to give occasional attention to weaving the rapidly growing side branches through the coarse mesh of the wire to provide an attractive display for a long season in summer. In winter the fan pattern of the branches is distinctly pleasing. With heavenly blue morning glories growing between the espaliered Altheas, the fence was as pleasing as could be desired. Probably it will be necessary to cut out the older shrubs every few years as they outgrow the fence, but it will be easy to replace them with the seedlings now growing between them, saving just enough to keep a continuing display of the young fans.

May Reach Height Of Over 15 Feet

Rose-of-Sharon is grown commonly either as one of the largest plants in shrubberies, or as specimen plantings in the lawn, where it makes a small tree and may grow to a height of 15 feet or more. If pruned judiciously, it will not shade the grass enough to weaken the lawn, and the self-feeding feature is not annoying in lawn areas, either because the sprouting is not so vigorous in competition with grass, or, perhaps, because the lawn mower beheads the young plants before they have opportunity to establish themselves.

Another fairly common use is as a hedge. Once fairly rooted, a Rose-of-Sharon hedge will endure almost any extreme of shearing or pruning. It is practical to behead the main stems about a foot below the final height of the hedge and prune off the ends of side branches and keep the width of the hedge to 2 feet—or even 18 inches—and still get a fairly dense and attractive hedge effect with a wealth of bloom over a long season in midsummer. This takes considerably less space than other deciduous hedges, such as privet or barberry, and only a fraction of the space required for one of the good evergreen hedges, such as yew or hemlock. This space-saving is a decided advantage on many narrow city lots—particularly in the areas where row houses are the rule and space is limited. However, an Althea hedge is likely to prove more desirable for the front of the house, to separate the grass plots, than to the rear to separate the gardened areas and borders filled with flowers, which are the rule in many of the blocks of row houses.

Where cultivated ground is ready to receive the seeds, the shrub is likely to be a serious pest with its everlasting seeding and sprouting. Individually, the seedings do not rate as bad weeds. They are easy to pull, even after a season of growth. The seeds that will scatter to the garden from a specimen tree or an isolated shrub or two, whether borne by the wind or by birds, will not prove particularly annoying. It is only when the Rose-of-Sharon can drop its burden of seed on cultivated ground that it becomes a real pest.

Gardener's Calendar

Pansy, delphinium, columbine and primula seed should be planted soon to allow time for good growth before cold weather. Seeds planted as late as September 1 may germinate well, but are likely to need cold frame protection for winter.

Mulch annuals and perennials and avoid need for further cultivation.

Keep dahlias and chrysanthemums growing with careful attention to watering and feeding. Chrysanthemums will make excellent use of weekly tonic dose of liquid manure. Dahlias may be allowed to set a few buds now.

If gladiolus plantings are being injured by thrips, spray with the tartar emetic spray, both to save this year's bloom and to kill the insects so that next year's corms can get a full feeding from the leaves.

Dig and thoroughly fertilize lawn areas that are to be reseeded. If lawn clippings have been dumped in a pile and allowed to decay, the resulting compost is probably the most perfect source of humus and fertility for seeding. The grass compost already has just the balanced fertility elements that grass requires.

Most of the rock garden plants can be divided or propagated now. A fairly cool or cloudy day makes a good time to overhaul the rock garden and plant and transplant.

Dig beds and borders deep for September plantings.

Gladiolus Show First Goes To a New Era

Picardy Supplanted At Takoma Club Exhibit; Sahara Third

It is real news when Picardy fails to carry away first honors at a gladiolus show. It has consistently come in first at most shows since its introduction and has created more favorable comment than any other gladiolus. The Washington area has been no exception until this year when at the show staged by the Takoma Horticultural Club, Picardy was second in the competition with New Era winning first.

Both first and second went to entries of Dr. G. A. Willis, winner of the sweepstake, and whose entries broke all records of the Takoma show in the number of points attained. The third best gladiolus was the specimen of Sahara entered by L. L. Powers, of Hyattsville, who was winner of the sweepstakes at the Woodridge Garden Club show.

The entries give a fair indication of their qualities. A number of entries of one variety rather proves that particular variety will give good results in this area and that the one perfect specimen is not just a bit of good luck on the part of some individual grower of the entry of someone who is extremely expert in horticultural matters.

First the New Era, the winner of the award for the best gladiolus in the show. It is a lovely pure pink with large ruffled blossoms. It has a fine strong straight stem and many of the florets open at one time. Picardy, of course, needs no description it is so well known. Its salmon-pink florets are of such immense size and it has such strength and quality that it gives great beauty wherever placed. It is always shown in a class by itself as there are many entries and other gladiolus cannot stand the competition. There have been many entries of Saharas at the recent shows. This gladiolous is one of the smoky shades, ashes of roses tinged with purple.

Vagabond Prince, another smoky, seemed a popular gladiolus with exhibitors. This variety has rightly been termed "a gorgeous gladiolus" for it has the rich coloring of rare old tapestries, enlivened with a blotch of glowing flame color on the lip petal. Danny Boy is of similar color and had several good entries. Wings of Song has beautifully shaped florets and lovely coloring of slightly smoky coral pink.

In lavender Minuet still seems to be a universal favorite and is considered by many experts to be easily the best lavender. Charles Dickens goes into the deeper tones of violet purple. It is very striking and unusual and offers a new note into flower arrangement color contrasts. In the blue and blue purples, Blue Admiral and Ave Maria had good entries. The lovely Pelegrina was missing and one wonders why this superlative beautiful gladiolus does not have more frequent entries as it produces strong blooms in this area.

Deep red velvety petals make the variety Leschi particularly desirable. There were many fine reds. Recovery, a Willis entry at Takoma, was a fine cherry-colored specimen. Both Commander Koehl and American Commander had great blood-red blooms and Beacon was well named, for it combined a brilliant ruffled red edge and glowing yellow center.

Yellow gladiolus have such wonderful possibilities for both house and garden that one usually finds many fine specimens. At Takoma there were pale yellow Harriet Moons, Golden Chimes and Mary Damaris and the deeper toned Golden Goddess and King Midas, very fine specimens grown by several exhibitors.

Maid of Orleans seemed to be the most popular of all the whites among exhibitors, for there were many good entries and it won the blue ribbon. Perfectly placed florets of pure glistening white and a creamy throat make this gladiolus as lovely as the rarest lily.

Doyle Leaves Today For West Coast

Prof. Henry Grattan Doyle, dean of Columbian College of George Washington University and president of its chapter of Phi Beta Kappa, is leaving by motor today for the triennial meeting of the united chapters of the honor fraternity on August 28-31, in San Francisco.

The convention will consider the granting of charters to chapters at nine institutions, among them the Catholic University. Others under consideration are Bucknell University, University of Denver, Albion College of Michigan, Elmira College, Wake Forest College, University of Wyoming, Wofford College, Milwaukee-Downer College.

District Speleologists Plan Program of Cave Exploration

Society Issues Bulletin Announcing Activities; Scientists, Government Workers and Professional People Are Members

This is the fifteenth in a series on nature groups in Washington.

By Richard Oulahan, Jd.

Speleology, the study of caves, came into its own in Washington last year with the organization of the Speleological Society of the District of Columbia.

Man once lived in caves. For a whole era our ancestors were sheltered by these rocky holes, carved out by nature. Ever since they began to build more substantial dwelling places, men have been interested in and have made use of caves. The grottoes of Capri, the far-flung caves in which pirates buried their treasure, the moonshiners hideouts in our own Blue Ridge Mountains—these are but a few of the many alluring caverns that have contributed to the romance and mystery of caves.

Nearly everyone finds some fascination in caves, be he just an average, adventurous person, a scientist interested in the study of stalagmites and stalactites, or a historian, tracing the story of mankind in these obscure holes in the earth. It was with this fact in mind that a few zealots of cave lore organized, in May, 1939, the Speleological Society of the District.

Society Membership Reflects Interest

The interest in caves was indicated by an increase in membership of the society. There are a number of geologists, and other men of science, as well as the proprietors and curators of several well-known caverns in the society, but the impressive majority of the group is made up of Government clerks, lawyers, doctors, housewives photographers and others from a multitude of professions. A look at the list of members reveals a sales clerk, three patent examiners and a masseuse—amateur speleologists all! Members are not all from Washington and vicinity, by any means. They come from Philadelphia, New York, Massachusetts and the "cave country" of western Virginia and West Virginia. Membership is around 70 now, of whom 31 have actively taken part in exploring and surveying caves.

Plans for a close-knit, smooth-running organization were adopted by the society when it was formed. Direction of the group is by a board of governors and is carried out by the club officers. President of the society for 1939-40 is William J. Stephenson. Alden Snell and Elmer Harmon are treasurer and secretary, respectively. To better organize the varied interests of the society permanent committees on records, mapping, photography, equipment and safety, exploration, fauna, paleontology, formations, publicity, program and activities, membership, junior members and bibliography were formed.

Many Field Trips Taken by Members

Since the beginning of the Speleological Society, many active trips into the field have been taken by members. These include visits to the familiar caverns of Luray and the Shenandoah Valley, as well as forays into lesser known, even unexplored caves. In the first issue of the society's quarterly Bulletin accounts are given of the exploration, survey and study of Blowing Cave, Rhea's Cave, Madden's Cave, John Brown's Cave (rumored to have been Brown's secret arsenal), Siler's Cave, Mohler's Cave and Withero's Cave.

An annual meeting is held by the society in April, with another gathering in October for the purpose of presenting reports of progress on society activities. Non active and nonresident members are kept informed through the Bulletin and through the mail-order interchange of books from the society's library.

Though the exploration of caves is a fascinating pursuit, it is naturally, dangerous as well. To insure its members' safety in the field, the society drew up a safety code, which is strictly observed. Failure to comply with the safety code might result in expulsion from the club of the foolhardy member.

All reports, maps, photographs, specimens and other findings of members made on society-sponsored trips become the property of the society and may be studied by members or others interested authorities at any time. The equipment, publications and other expenses of the society are met by the dues of the members.

Plans for the present involve the study and exploration of caves and cave-lore in Washington and the neighboring States. In the future, however, the group hopes to establish sister Speleological Societies in other areas throughout America, with all the societies being merged into one national league. In this way the Speleological Society will become a virtual clearing house of cave information.

The present value of the Speleological Society of the District of Columbia to science is great. The potential value of the group is enormous. Cave clubs have been formed before, but none with such success, and with such a program, as this. Many of the caverns of America are surveyed and thoroughly known to science, but the majority are still marked "unknown territory" in the maps of the underground. The local group proposes to change all that. Speleology as a science has heretofore been largely limited to individual scientists; its proposed organization under the local group will immeasurably advance the science.

As an aid to science, as a sport for the adventurous, and as a hobby for the layman, the Speleological Society is serving a fine purpose. And its future has every reason to look rosy.

Charlotte Hall Academy Gets New Building

A new $25,000 industrial arts and recreation building has been erected at Charlotte Hall Military Academy, Charlotte Hall, Md., to house courses to be offered for the first time in September, according to plans recently announced by Maj. M. D. Burgee, principal.

The building will be equipped for courses in manual training and mechanical drawing. One floor will be devoted to recreational facilities for the cadets' indoor activities during inclement weather. Fluorescent lighting will be used througout the building.

The academy will open its 167th session September 12. "It has been in continuous operation since its founding in 1774 by the colonial Province of Maryland," the announcement of the opening pointed out. It is located in St. Mary's County in southern Maryland.

HOBBIES

At the Chess Table

By Willard Mutchler.

Representatives from eight local chess clubs recently convened at the Paul Morphy C. C. to make detailed plans for interclub matches at the earliest hint of the fall season. With Floyd Wirsing, indefatigable faculty adviser of the Interhigh School Chess Association, serving as chairman and sparkplug of the gathering, results were achieved at a rapid tempo.

Collaborating were Henry A. Rousseau and W. H. Mutchler, Capital City C. C.; Scott Dillon and N. P. Wigginton, Chess Divan; Dr. A. Steinbach and H. W. Horn, Federal Security C. C.; E. W. Kunkle, Paul Morphy C. C.; C. Yost, Federal Trade Commission C. C.; B. B. Toll, Maritime Commission C. C., and H. Keegan, Archives C. C.

The outcome will prove gratifying to hundreds of local fans. Some 200 participants are likely to be active in the projected interclub activities, on a scale unprecedented in Washington.

The rules adopted were few and simple. The eight organizations named are to commence a round robin interclub match tournament, beginning the week of September 15. Until that date any other well-organized chess club in this vicinity is eligible to make application to enter the fray.

Applications should be sent to Floyd Wirsing, 817 South Overlook drive, Alexandria, Va. Play must be carried out strictly in accordance with schedule, no postponements allowed, with games beginning at 8:15 and 8:30 as the deadline.

Each club must arrange to play a minimum of five boards, with no upper limit established. No player belonging to more than one chess club is eligible to play for any but the one he selects. Each club must submit to Chairman Wirsing a list of its membership, with players' names in the order in which they shall always occur in the match play.

College or university teams were more or less automatically barred from participation, since the school year commences too late for these organizations to make proper application. However, it was the sense of the meeting that this year local groups should get togehter and organize an independent intercollegiate team tournament.

The projected tournament is in no sense to be regarded as an interclub team championship tourney this year, but it is hoped to achieve that objective ultimately. The primary objective is, for the nonce, to promote acquaintance and amity between the various participating groups and their membership. The complete tentative schedule for the tournament, listing the host clubs and dates of play, will appear in this column in the near future.

Clarksburg C. C.

From William Challinor, tournament director, we learn that a thriving new chess club has been established at Clarksburg, W. Va., with H. Reid Holt, president, and Gene Collett, secretary. Mr. Challinor wants to start a round robin handicap tourney, but is having some difficulty in convincing the younger and mediocre players that it is no disgrace to accept odds from stronger members.

Let it be said, if this editor's advice is desired, that with a standard scale of handicaps or odds in effect, the tourney will be much more fun for everyone concerned. More of the same would form good diversion in some of Washington's clubs. It is a real thrill both to give and to receive odds in serious play. The strong player finds it no small feat to emerge successfully from the opening when yielding such apparently inconsequential odds as pawn and move, or pawn and two.

The weaker player, accepting such odds or greater, learns lessons that are hard to master when the play is even. For when an opponent gives material and still wins, he is invariably forced either to assume more aggressive tactics than normally, or simply "sit tight" and wait for the inevitable mistakes.

The odds-taker soon learns caution, and puts his adversary on the alert for more obscure and better lines of play. Eventually each profits and derives more enjoyment from the game than might otherwise have been the case.

One of the bitterest pills for the odds-taker to swallow is defeat traceable to overconfidence—the attitude which whispers "no one in the world can beat me at odds of a knight, provided I play carefully." But they can, and do, which demonstrates his lack of skill. For chess is definitely not a game of chance.

Rapid transit play is another way to real fun, and imparts the ability to judge positions quickly and accurately. The modus operandi is to play round robin, preferably with a regular schedule, as in any tourney.

Lacking a clock which automatically signals the end of ten seconds, some person is relegated to the sidelines and charged with the duty of tersely yelling "Move!" as the second hand on his watch reaches the correct setting. He is authorized to call a forfeit on any player failing to respond promptly to his order.

In actual practice, it is customary to make the first five or ten moves at the rate of five seconds per move.

Solutions to Problems

The single variation in Problem No. 886 goes 1 R-KR3, P-B6; 2 R-Rsq, PxR(Q)ch; 3 QxQ mate. The black P on QKtsq should, of course, have been a black B.

Vincent L. Eaton, in his excellent lecture on problems before the Federal Security C. C., cited the unique example which we pass on to solvers today. The goodly gathering which heard Chess Review's problem editor discourse, left with a profound respect for his abilities at and knowledge of his hobby.

Tests Reveal Telepathic Reaction to Red

Experiments Made By Psychologist Show Extraordinary Results

By John J. O'Neill.

A telepathic antagonism to the color red has been revealed by experiments in extra-sensory perception conducted by Prof Gardner Murphy and Ernest Taves, of the department of psychology, Columbia University, as part of the research program of the American Society for Psychical Research. The results are published in the current issue of the society's proceedings.

A variety of tests involving many factors were made by Dr. Murphy and Mr. Taves on a large group of subjects, most of whom are members of the society. None of those who took part was a psychic, but membership in the society of these subjects indicated an interest in the study and made them a highly selected group. This, however, did not result in any scores higher than those of other groups tested by Dr. Murphy and other investigators.

Some of the tests were made at short distances, as in adjoining rooms, and in these machines were used to select objects figuring in the tests. In many of the experiments the choice was limited to two possibilities—yes-no, heads-tails, black-white. Other tests employed the ordinary extra-sensory-perception cards and a deck called "Rook cards," 56 cards made up of four suits, each suit numbered from one to fourteen and each suit in a different color. Many of the experiments were made at relatively long distance, from the society's headquarters at Thirty-fourth street and Madison avenue to Prof. Murphy's department at Columbia University, at 117th street and Amsterdam avenue.

Some Surprising Results

In all of the experiments in which there were just two choices the results were what might be expected from plain guessing. The score for the group as a whole was slightly above chance, but when the results were studied in the light of particular tests and particular individuals, some surprising results were found. One man who made 10 per cent of the card calls had more than a third of all of the correct calls to his credit.

When the readings of the Rook cards were tabulated and analyzed, it was found that the group as a whole had a slightly above-average record. When the results were subdivided by the color of the cards it was found that when calls were made of the suit in which the figures were painted in red on a white background the scoring dropped significantly lower than in any other test. There were 2,650 calls in this group and the correct calls were 95 below chance expectation, a result mathematically significant. If due to chance it could happen only once in 5,000 repetitions of the complete test.

This effect involving red was considered so interesting that Prof. Murphy communicated with several professors of psychology in universities throughout the country asking that the test be repeated by them. He made more extensive tests with the red cards among the American Society for Psychical Research group, running the total readings up to 6,975. Again the antagonism to red was found.

In no case did the subject know the color of the cards with which they were working, so that the results were governed by some power other than the conscious level.

Despite the fact that the subjects were not informed when they were working with red cards, they became aware of it. Somewhere below the level of consciousness they sensed that involved was some faculty which prevented them from making a record as good as usual in identifying the cards by telepathy. This faculty had the same effect on the telepathic process as a red traffic light or a red danger sign.

The Columbia scientists, in commenting on the unusually low record on the red cards, declare: "A negative result of this kind, from a purely statistical standpoint, is precisely as significant as an equally positive deviation would be.

'Picture of the Week'

The setting sun, tall timbers and the sound of the bugle as the flag is lowered at retreat is the scene captured by R. L. Doty, 1735 Eye street northwest to win the cash award in the Post's "Picture of the Week" competition. Mr. Doty used a Rolleiflex and Agfa plenachrome film. The exposure was 1/100th second at f.11 with a yellow filter.

How to Win 'Picture of Week' Contest, Get $5

All amateur photographers among The Post's readers are invited to submit entries in The Post's "Picture of the Week" competition. The prize-winning picture will appear on this page and there will be a prize of $5 for the winner, to be selected by The Post's photographic staff.

RULES:

1. Competition open to everyone except professional photographers and Post employes.

2. Submit as many entries as you wish.

3. Competition ends Wednesday, midnight. The winning picture will be published in the following Sunday's Post.

4. No prints will be returned. By submitting an entry, the contestant automatically gives permission to The Post to use it in any way.

5. The Post will pay $5 for the picture selected as the best of the week.

6. Address your entries to PIX, The Washington Post, Washington, D. C.

7. Write name and address plainly on back of each entry. Give date and title of contest and tell type of camera used, lighting conditions, etc.

Photographs entered in this week's competition must reach The Washington Post by midnight Wednesday, August 21. Do not duplicate pictures entered in previous contests; the best photograph in the group will be awarded the prize.

Over the Bridge Player's Shoulder

By Marian H. Barre

A weary but triumphant cavalcade arrived in Washington late Monday with a world championship bridge crown among its effects. The wearers thereof were Oscar Brotman and Alvin Roth, the District's entry in the fourteenth annual Contract Championships at Asbury Park. Members of an intercity team, the local players had just captured the Nate B. Spingold trophy in the premier event for masters' foursomes. Their teammates were Bertram Lebhar, of New Rochelle, and Samuel Katz, of New York. It is the first time for a world title to be held by a Capitalite.

The champions are both Federal employes; Roth works in the Government Printing office and Brotman in the Securities and Exchange Commission. Although only in their middle 20s they have long been recognized as brilliant and resourceful players. But even their most ardent admirers were astonished when they defeated the von Zedtwitz team. Sam Fry, jr., Edward Hymes, jr., Charles Lochridge and Myron Fuchs made up the Baron's five-man team. It was the only seeded lineup that survived the upsets of the previous knock-out rounds in which the world-famous Four Aces and the Goren outfit had gone down in defeat.

In the semifinals the Roth team won by 680 points over Baltimoreans who often have worsted their District opponents. For the fans at home, this revenge was sweet. Baltimore players were Col. Robert Gill, Arthur Schlessinger, Clagett Bowie and Charles Shapiro. After Bowie was called away by illness in his family, Samuel Yessel, of Philadelphia, was put in. It was this lineup that eliminated the Four Aces.

The von Zedtwitz team entered the finals via a 5,770-point triumph over Mr. and Mrs. George Kennedy, Robert Chatkin and Mrs. Valerie Klein, all of New York. They entered as overwhelming favorites in the betting, the odds running as high as 20 to 1. Every member of the team is a national luminary, and the game is scored by total points, the method considered the fairest test in bridge, where the element of luck is reduced to a minimum.

Against this aggregation of talent the young District stars won by 2,570 points in a 60-board match, after trailing by 2,700 points at the half-way mark.

It was the greatest triumph ever achieved by local players. The tocsins rang in Philadelphia and New York, the great metropoles that always shared the palms of bridge. But in the District it was telephone bells that rang all night long to rouse the sleepers with the stirring news that Roth and Brotman are world champions.

• • • •

It is inevitable that the masters' team victory should overshadow all other exploits of the Capital group playing at Asbury, but even without this major victory the local record is outstanding. About 20 Washingtonians took part, everyone distinguished himself in some game.

Playing in the national match for mixed teams of four, Dr. and Mrs. A. J. Steinberg, Louis Newman and Mrs. Lottie Planco, of Long Island, lost the match by half a board to von Zedtwitz, Miss Marie Black, Henry Chanin and Mrs. Olive Peterson. In spite of the closeness of the score, the local team finished third as the Philadelphia team of Edward Ellenbogan, Mrs. J. J. Mitchell, Charles Solomon and Mrs. Ben Golder tied for top and then lost the title in the play-off.

Mrs. Irene Surguy and Gene Hermann led the record field of 64 pairs in the initial session of masters' pair play. It was the first time Mrs. Surguy has competed in a national tournament. The masters' title was won by Harry Fishbein, a defending champion, paired with Morie Elis instead of his former partner, Robert Appleyard. Fishbein was the only defender who retained a title.

Roth and Brotman won the opening round of the men's pair game which was the curtain-raising event, thus putting Washington in the news from the start. They finished third. Winners were M. D. Maier, of New York, and Robert McPherran, of Philadelphia, who made the most decisive victory of the tournament. Katz and Lebhar also finished among the leaders in this event in which 50 pairs were entered. Oswald Jacoby and John Crawford, defending champions, finished in eleventh place.

A virtually unknown pair, Mrs. John Waidlich, of Rosemont, and Mrs. Edith Atkinson, of Wayne, Pa., won the women's match. Newman's partner in the mixed team game, Mrs. Planco, and Mrs. Henry Drescher, of New York, were runners-up, trailing less than a point behind top score. The two finest women players in the Nation, Mrs. R. C. Young, of Philadelphia, and Mrs. A. M. Sobel, of New York, were defending champions. After getting off to a bad start they recovered sufficiently to finish seventh. There were no Washington women entered in this game.

In the President's Pair event, Mr. and Mrs. Bernard Rosson, of this city, led one round. Other local players entered in it included Mrs. Alma Byrne, A. M. Sheppard and P. E. Henninger. Mrs. Byrne and Sheppard also played on a masters' team.

S. Garton Churchill, of Silver Spring, Md., paired with von Zedtwitz, made one of the fine partnerships that fought its way to the top after a slow start in the masters' pair game. In the team match when opposed by the von Zedtwitz team, Churchill's lineup lost the knock-out round. His teammates were Cecil Head and Travers Legros, of New York, and Lawrence Weiss, of Boston.

Ely Culbertson, who has ceased playing tournament bridge, made his first appearance at a national tournament since he addressed the Nationals in Washington in 1937. Culbertson presented some of the Asbury trophies.

Although the kibitzers' gallery was increased this year to about 100 seats the sign of standing room only had to be used constantly. The 1940 spectator crop was unusually courteous. Whenever the master of ceremonies enthused over a brilliant play, the audience dutifully clapped. Total entries in the tournament hit a new attendance record.

And now duplicate fans are preparing to depart for the "Land of the Sky," where the third annual Southern Appalachian Championships are on in Asheville, N. C., this week. The opening date is August 23.

The closest duplicate game played here this year was held at the Kennedy-Warren last Monday. With 15 pairs in the game, there was a three-way tie for top, while two other pairs tied for second place, scoring only a half-point less than the leading teams.

What Scientists are doing

By Howard W Blakeslee,

Associated Press Science Editor

Portland, Ore., Aug. 17.—Apple seeds are rich in a muscle-regulating substance, probably a vitamin, whose discovery was described today at the University of Oregon Medical School.

Eating ground apple seeds, or drinking the oil which is pressed from them, both caused remarkable recoveries in animals near death with wasted muscles.

The apple seed properties were found in experiments in the nutritional research laboratory under direction of Dr. Ira A. Manville, clinical associate professor of medicine.

The muscular diseases from which the animals, rabbits, guinea pigs and rats, suffered were experimental, that is, induced, but they were precisely the same as a serious class of human ills. Lou Gehrig's trouble is one of this kind.

In the animals the wasted muscles and paralysis were caused by lack of vitamin E. This is the so-called fertility vitamin. Whether it is solely a fertility vitamin is beginning to be doubted. But it is certainly a powerful nerve and muscle vitamin. The muscular weakness without E is due to wasting of muscle.

In the animal paralysis, Dr. Manville said there may be some other missing factor of diet besides Vitamin E. The nature of this other factor is unknown.

Animals with muscles so flabby that they seemed paralyzed were restored to near normal appearance in 24 hours by apple seed oil. They had been too weak to eat. In two or three days they were eating heartily. They recovered promptly.

The oil was a complete preventive for the muscular paralysis even when all Vitamin E was removed from diet.

Wheat germ oil is a cure for this muscular trouble in animals, but Dr. Manville said it costs about $12 a pint, while the new apple seed remedy should be cheap. He explained that the seeds are a waste product of processed apples and that Washington's Yakima district produces 25 to 40 tons of this waste annually.

Bridge Winners

At the Kennedy-Warren—First, Mrs. E. R. Walton and Mrs. C. O. Evans tied with Mrs. Marian H. Barre and Lewis R. Tubbs; third, Mrs. Rose Robins and Mrs. H. R. King.

At Hotel 2400—Monday, first, Henry Stearman and J. Weinstein; second, W. de St. Aubin and Lewis Tubbs; Sunday, first, Mrs. M. E. Reddy and Mrs. Marian H. Barre; second, Mr. and Mrs. Daniels.

At the Lasalle Apartment—Monday, first, Mrs. L. Hesse and John Donnelly; second, Mrs. B. F. Zinke and Miss K. Wood; Thursday, first, Mrs. Katherine Cotter and Mrs. J. A. Long; second, Mrs. Mabel Dobeck and Mrs. Dixie T. Wright.

At 1355 Euclid street northwest—Tuesday afternoon, first, Mrs. Mabie DuBois and Mr. M. Boyce; second, John Donnelly and Miss Thelma Goodstein; Tuesday evening, first, Mrs. Frieda Boyce and Mrs. Jack Bennett; second, Mrs. Katherine Cotter and Mrs. D. E. Stephen; Wednesday morning, first, Mrs. W. Reddy and Mrs. Harold Younx; second, John Donnelly and Warren Jones; Friday evening, first, Mrs. Strayhan and John Donnelly; second, Mrs. C. W. Zimmer and Mrs. Jimmie Athey; Saturday evening, first, Mrs. Frieda Boyce and Miss Thelma Goodstein; second, Mr. and Mrs. B. Myers.

Stamps

Gummed varieties of the special printing of United States postage stamps issued March 15, 1935, "without gum" have finally been offered for sale.

It will be recalled that after the episode of a collector trying to dispose of a sheet of the Mother's Day commemorative, imperforated and without gum, for $30,000, a lively debate in the House took place and finally, in order to give all collectors an opportunity to secure the stamps, Postmaster General James A. Farley ordered that the entire series be issued imperforate and without gum. The stamps were issued in full sheets and in blocks of four.

Soon after the stamps appeared rumors were current that the variety of these special printings were being used without gum. Now it is reported by Secretary of the Interior Harold L. Ickes that he has had these stamps gummed and that he has donated a large lot of such stamps to be sold at auction in New York the coming fall.

For years strong denials were always made when mention was made of any of these varieties being used with gum. The standard catalog clearly states that the special printings of the entire series were "without gum" and that was the intention of the department. But, according to Secretary Ickes, in his letter to Chancellor Harry Woodburn Chase, of New York University, who will supervise the auction sale, the following appears:

"Every stamp collector knows that when the regular issues of Park commemoratives were printed there were also printed a small number of imperforate stamps upon the same dies. I bought two complete sets of these imperforates that were gummed. I still have one complete set of these gummed imperforates, but the other set I have cut into to some extent in order to send to my stamp-collecting friends."

Postoffice Department officials were greatly concerned when the fact became known that some of the gummed varieties were to be sold at auction for refugee benefits. All officials agree that when the special printing was ordered of all of the varieties, including National Parks as well as commemoratives, that none were to be gummed.

So it appears that somebody passed along the word that Mr. Ickes could have some of his sheets gummed. Official releases ordered by Postmaster General Farley were all very explicit in stating that the sheets of all stamps were imperforate and ungummed. But during the year rumors that gummed varieties had been issued and even used in the mails persisted. Now the fact of gummed varieties has been confirmed by Mr. Ickes.

Many collectors regard these gummed varieties as illegitimate stamps for they were not issued in accordance with official announcements. While it is unquestioned that if these stamps are finally placed at auction, large prices will be secured for any sort of an error, legitimate or otherwise, will find a ready purchaser. Then there are many collectors who are of the opinion that the varieties not being authorized should not be placed on sale anywhere. The issue will be sharply drawn from now on.

The department declares that "so far as the Postoffice Department is concerned, there have never been any imperforate stamps issued that have been gummed." This is an undisputed fact.

On February 6, 1935, in order to clarify some misrepresentations which have been made to the issuance of United States postage stamps, and in order to leave no possible question in the mind of the public, as to the policy of the Postoffice Department, the following statement was made:

1. Collectors of stamps do not recognize varieties of stamps such as imperforate varieties, inverted center varieties, etc., unless these varieties have been sold to the public. Sometimes in the history of the department these have been sold over the postoffice counters by mistake on the part of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. Where this happens the stamp becomes a collector's "find" and often attains great value. In the case of several recent issues, a number of sheets in imperforate condition were struck off as samples but were not sold to the public. This being so, they have no value from the collector's point of view because they do not fall under the general rule any more than proof copies, essays, or stamps marked "specimen."

2. Because question has been raised, however, in regard to these sheets, which were not sold to the public, and because of the possibility that in the future some of these sheets might find their way into the hands of the public and be given a fictitious and unwarranted value, the Postoffice Department has decided to take the one step possible to eliminate this for all time. The department will place on sale, through the Philatelic Agency in Washington, imperforate sheets of all the issues of which imperforate "specimen" or "souvenir" sheets have already been run, and these will be printed in sufficient numbers to meet the request of all collectors. Normally such imperforate stamps should not be available for postage, but it is, of course, impossible for every postmaster to check up on every stamp which passes through his office and they will, therefore, be available for postage.

3. Orders have been issued that hereafter no sheets of any stamp will be allowed outside of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing except in the form in which the stamps is available to the public over the counter.

From this it will be seen that no stamps of the imperforate variety should have been gummed for any purpose whatsoever.

The imperforate sheets were on sale at the Philatelic Agency from March 15 to June 15, 1935. There were 20 varieties sold, both in blocks of four and in full sheets, for which the department received $1,663,717.66. Of this sum, there were sold 184,347 full sheets valued at $1,467,972.70, while there were 936,262 stamps in blocks of four sold, valued at $195,744.96. In this entire lot there were no blocks or sheets sold that were gummed.

Philatelic meetings scheduled for the week are as follows: Tuesday evening, Washington Air Mail Society, Thomson Community Center, and Collectors Club, Branch 5, S. P. A., Thomson Community Center, and Wednesday evening, Washington Philatelic Society, Mayflower Hotel.

• • • •

Beginning with the sailing of the S. S. Hikawa Maru from Seattle, Wash., August 12, 1940, Postal Union regular mails, as well as ordinary and registered mails, for Estonia, Latvia, Lithuania and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics will be dispatched via Japan and the trans-Siberian Railway. Consequently all mail for the countries thus listed are now routed via Seattle or San Francisco.

• • • •

The Postoffice Department will exhibit special frames of stamps at the annual fair of the town of Greenbelt, Md., September 5 to 7.

• • • •

The Society of Philatelic Americans has a permit, No. 58791, for all official mail in connection with the annual convention at Cleveland, Ohio, August 29 through September 1. It consists of the seal of the society with the words "Annual Convention, Hotel Statler, Cleveland, Ohio, August 29 through September 1, 1940."

• • • •

Ernest A. Kehr, director of the stamp exhibition at the New York World's Fair, announces that the week of August 25 to August 31 has been designated as precancel week and an unusual exhibition will be held in the British Pavilion sponsored by the board of governors of the Precancel Stamp Society.

• • • •

Postmasters have been notified that the Postoffice Department's stocks of the following varieties of commemorative stamps have been exhausted and cannot be further supplied: 3-cent Oregon, 1936; 3-cent Ordnance of 1787, 1936; 3-cent, 4-cent and 5-cent Army and Navy, 1937; 5-cent Virginia Dare, 1937; 3-cent Hawaii, 1937; 3-cent Northwest Territory, 1938; 3-cent Delaware, 1938, and 3-cent Ratification of the Constitution, 1938. It often happens that postmasters in many offices have supplies of commemorative stamps that have been removed from sale at the Philatelic Agency, and this notice serves to call attention to the exhaustion of all sales, not only at the Philatelic Agency but at postoffices.

The Collectors' Club, Branch 5, S. P. A., met Tuesday evening in the Thomson Community Center, President D. H. Reichgut presiding. Several applications for membership were received and new members elected. A. H. Whitney conducted another philatelic quiz, two teams, headed by P. D. Weeks and Alexander Halperson, participating. The latter team won the highest number of points, with Mrs. Grace L. MacKnight the largest individual scorer, who won the prize. A short auction followed, E. A. Grant officiating. There will be another meeting Tuesday evening. All stamp collectors are invited.

A cover of the "Tin Can-Canoe Mail: Island" from the collection of Miss Mary Louise Aspinwall, of Catonsville, Md., a junior collector. The cover bears three values of the stamps of Tonga and was mailed by Walter George Quensell, the original "Tin Can Mail" man who resides in the Tonga Island group in the South Sea. The cover was received in Baltimore on July 12, 1940, having arrived registered and air mail from the South Seas. The postoffice from which the cover was mailed is "Niufoou, Tonga."

Liechtenstein To Issue New Set of Stamps

Lichtenstein announces a set of commemorative stamps for release on August 25. The stamps will portray Prince Johannes in various stages of his life. There will be five denominations: 20-rappen, red, depicts the prince as a child; 30-rappen, blue, and 50-rappen, green, Prince Johannes as a man; 1-franc, violet, the prince as an old man, and the 1-franc, 50-rappen, brown, the coat of arms of the country.

Japan announces that when the census of 1940 is begun a set of two new stamps in its commemoration will be issued, the date being set for October 1. This will be Japan's third census and it will be taken throughout the empire. Details as to values, designs and colors are yet to be announced.

Ascension has issued three new postage values in the design of the 3-d., of the 1939 series, showing a scene of nature with the portrait of the king at the right. They are: 1-d., orange and gray; 3-d., gray and black, and 4-d., ultramarine and black.

Nicaragua's stamp in honor of the fiftieth anniversary of the founding of the Pan-American Union finally appeared August 3. It is a large stamp, air mail, 1.25-c., denomination of various colors. The central design shows the Statue of Liberty over the United States shield, against a background of the mountainous Nicaraguan sea coast.

Brazil has reissued the 100-reis, orange, 400-r., light blue, and 1,000-r., blue green of 1920-21 series with a new watermark paper, "Casa da Moeda do Brasil," and the same watermarked paper for the 200-r., purple of 1933, and the 20-r., gray green, 100-r., red, and 200-r., blue green postage due stamps of 1913-23.

Panama, through a decree issued by President Augusto Boyd, has announced the overprinting of the recent Pan-American Union commemorative air mail stamp and certain denominations of the Panama Canal commemorative stamps of 1939.

There were issued 140,000 Pan-American Union air mails, 15-centavos, blue, and 50,000 will be overprinted "8 centavos," thus leaving but 3,000 of the originals in stock. Of the Panama Canal air mail commemorative, 15-c., ultramarine, 1,000,000 copies were issued and 70,000 will be overprinted "5 centavos," leaving 13,000 originals on hand.

The Washington Philatelist

By William M. Stuart.

While official announcement has not been made, it is more than likely a new series of "National Defense Stamps" will be issued before the end of this year. It is understood the Administration has been considering such an issue for some time, and an announcement may be expected shortly.

STUART.

Postal officials have suggested a series consisting of three denominations—one, three and five-cent, with designs and minor details to be decided later. Proceeds derived from the sale of these stamps will be used for purposes other than supplying revenue for national defense.

It is a known fact that the Postoffice Department very recently refused to approve the suggested issue of a semipostal stamp. Many foreign nations issue such stamps, the surtax being used for specific charities. Those indorsing the so-called "Red Cross" issue wanted the surtax used for national defense, but all such suggestions were turned down. A statement explaining the reason for issuing the new series will be made public in due season. As usual, with each new issue, the cry of "too many stamps" will again be heard.

In these tragic war days stamp collecting goes on as usual and items are still being issued from the nations in conflict which find greater favor with the philatelist. The new series will be awaited with deep interest, and it is hoped the designs will be in accordance with the spirit of the times.

How Congressional Library's 1,000,000 Visitors Spend Their Time

By Christine Sadler

Into the lumbering, green-domed structure that houses the Library of Congress yearly go more than 1,000,000 visitors. Some 400,000 of them linger long enough to use the main reading room and 21,000 of them tarry in the genealogical division to find out about family trees.

Real scholars among them—generally speaking—get study rooms assigned and may settle down for six months. The library has 226 individual study rooms, all in use, and approximately 200 study tables set up in the stacks.

Largest and best-equipped in the world, the Library of Congress has approximately 6,000,000 books and pamphlets, almost 3,000,000 maps, charts and musical compositions, and "uncounted" manuscripts.

It is a student's paradise, be that student interested in Americana, Orientalia, fine arts, folk music Indic manuscripts, on the Creek nation.

Certificate of copyright for sheet music is made out by Gwendolyn Emerson, recorder. It will be good for 28 years, can be renewed for 28 more.

Chief attractions of the library as far as visitors making a quick turn through the halls are concerned seem to be the Declaration of Independence, the Constitution exhibit, the Gettysburg address, and the Gutenberg Bible. They draw the most exclamations and the most rapt expressions.

The Hispanic Room opened last October and the Whittall Pavillion completed a year ago in March are new and popular additions.

The Library of Congress was established in 1800 and opened in 1802 with 964 volumes and 9 maps. Ten years later, it contained 3,076 volumes. Many papers and books were destroyed by the British in 1814, although a belated evacuation saved most of them.

To repair the war damage, Thomas Jefferson offered his private library to the Government. He asked $23,700 for his 6,700 volumes and this was agreed to—despite cries of extravagance and protests against the "irreligious" character of many of his books.

Jefferson's collection formed the foundation of the library until 1851, when two-thirds of it was destroyed in a disastrous fire. Not until the copyright law was amended in 1870 did the library begin its rapid modern growth. Under this amendment, two copies of every "published item" must be depos-

HOBBIES

At the Chess Table

By Willard Mutchler.

Representatives from eight local chess clubs recently convened at the Paul Morphy C. C. to make detailed plans for interclub matches at the earliest hint of the fall season, with Floyd Wirsing, indefatigable faculty adviser of the Interhigh School Chess Association, serving as chairman and sparkplug of the gathering, results were achieved at a rapid tempo.

Collaborating were Henry A. Rousseau and W. H. Mutchler, Capital City C. C.; Scott Dillon and N. P. Wigginton, Chess Divan; Dr. A. Steinbach and H. W. Horn, Federal Security C. C.; E. W. Kunkle, Paul Morphy C. C.; C. Yost, Federal Trade Commission C. C.; B. B. Toll, Maritime Commission C. C., and H. Keegan, Archives C. C.

The outcome will prove gratifying to hundreds of local fans. Some 200 participants are likely to be active in the projected interclub activities, on a scale unprecedented in Washington.

The rules adopted were few and simple. The eight organizations named are to commence a round robin interclub match tournament, beginning the week of September 15. Until that date any other well-organized chess club in this vicinity is eligible to make application to enter the fray.

Applications should be sent to Floyd Wirsing, 817 South Overlook drive, Alexandria, Va. Play must be carried out strictly in accordance with schedule, no postponements allowed, with games beginning at 8:15 and 8:30 as the deadline.

Each club must arrange to play a minimum of five boards, with no upper limit established. No player belonging to more than one chess club is eligible to play for any but the one he selects. Each club must submit to Chairman Wirsing a list of its membership, with players' names in the order in which they shall always occur in the match play.

College or university teams were more or less automatically barred from participation, since the school year commences too late for these organizations to make proper application. However, it was the sense of the meeting that this year local groups should get togehter and organize an independent intercollegiate team tournament.

The projected tournament is in no sense to be regarded as an interclub team championship tourney this year, but it is hoped to achieve that objective ultimately. The primary objective is, for the nonce, to promote acquaintance and amity between the various participating groups and their membership. The complete tentative schedule for the tournament, listing the host clubs and dates of play, will appear in this column in the near future.

Clarksburg C. C.

From William Challinor, tournament director, we learn that a thriving new chess club has been established at Clarksburg, W. Va., with H. Reid Holt, president, and Gene Collett, secretary. Mr. Challinor wants to start a round robin handicap tourney, but is having some difficulty in convincing the younger and mediocre players that it is no disgrace to accept odds from stronger members.

Let it be said, if this editor's advice is desired, that with a standard scale of handicaps or odds in effect, the tourney will be much more fun for everyone concerned. More of the same would form good diversion in some of Washington's clubs. It is a real thrill both to give and to receive odds in serious play. The strong player finds it no small feat to emerge successfully from the opening when yielding such apparently inconsequential odds as pawn and move, or pawn and two.

The weaker player, accepting such odds or greater, learns lessons that are hard to master when the play is even. For when an opponent gives material and still wins, he is invariably forced either to assume more aggressive tactics than normally, or simply "sit tight" and wait for the inevitable mistakes.

The odds-taker soon learns caution, and puts his adversary on the alert for more obscure and better lines of play. Eventually each profits and derives more enjoyment from the game than might otherwise have been the case.

One of the bitterest pills for the odds-taker to swallow is defeat traceable to overconfidence—the attitude which whispers "no one in the world can beat me at odds of a knight, provided I play carefully." But they can, and do, which demonstrates his lack of skill. For chess is definitely not a game of chance.

Rapid transit play is another way to real fun, and imparts the ability to judge positions quickly and accurately. The modus operandi is to play round robin, preferably with a regular schedule, as in any tourney.

Lacking a clock which automatically signals the end of ten seconds, some person is relegated to the sidelines and charged with the duty of tersely yelling "Move!" as the second hand on his watch reaches the correct setting. He is authorized to call a forfeit on any player failing to respond promptly to his order.

In actual practice, it is customary to make the first five or ten moves at the rate of five seconds per move.

Solutions to Problems

The single variation in Problem No. 886 goes 1 R-KR3, P-B6; 2 R-Rsq, PxR(Q)ch; 3 QxQ mate. The black P on QKtsq should, of course, have been a black B.

Vincent L. Eaton, in his excellent lecture on problems before the Federal Security C. C., cited the unique example which we pass on to solvers today. The goodly gathering which heard Chess Review's problem editor discourse, left with a profound respect for his abilities at and knowledge of his hobby.

Tests Reveal Telepathic Reaction to Red

Experiments Made By Psychologist Show Extraordinary Results

By John J. O'Neill.

A telepathic antagonism to the color red has been revealed by experiments in extra-sensory perception conducted by Prof Gardner Murphy and Ernest Taves, of the department of psychology, Columbia University, as part of the research program of the American Society for Psychical Research. The results are published in the current issue of the society's proceedings.

A variety of tests involving many factors were made by Dr. Murphy and Mr. Taves on a large group of subjects, most of whom are members of the society. None of those who took part was a psychic, but membership in the society of these subjects indicated an interest in the study and made them a highly selected group. This, however, did not result in any scores higher than those of other groups tested by Dr. Murphy and other investigators.

Some of the tests were made at short distances, as in adjoining rooms, and in these machines were used to select objects figuring in the tests. In many of the experiments the choice was limited to two possibilities—yes-no, heads-tails, black-white. Other tests employed the ordinary extra-sensory-perception cards and a deck called "Rook cards," 56 cards made up of four suits, each suit numbered from one to fourteen and each suit in a different color. Many of the experiments were made at relatively long distance, from the society's headquarters at Thirty-fourth street and Madison avenue to Prof. Murphy's department at Columbia University, at 117th street and Amsterdam avenue.

Some Surprising Results

In all of the experiments in which there were just two choices the results were what might be expected from plain guessing. The score for the group as a whole was slightly above chance, but when the results were studied in the light of particular tests and particular individuals, some surprising results were found. One man who made 10 per cent of the card calls had more than a third of all of the correct calls to his credit.

When the readings of the Rook cards were tabulated and analyzed, it was found that the group as a whole had a slightly above-average record. When the results were subdivided by the color of the cards it was found that when calls were made of the suit in which the figures were painted in red on a white background the scoring dropped significantly lower than in any other test. There were 2,650 calls in this group and the correct calls were 95 below chance expectation, a result mathematically significant. If due to chance it could happen only once in 5,000 repetitions of the complete test.

This effect involving red was considered so interesting that Prof. Murphy communicated with several professors of psychology in universities throughout the country asking that the test be repeated by them. He made more extensive tests with the red cards among the American Society for Psychical Research group, running the total readings up to 6,975. Again the antagonism to red was found.

In no case did the subject know the color of the cards with which they were working, so that the results were governed by some power other than the conscious level.

Despite the fact that the subjects were not informed when they were working with red cards, they became aware of it. Somewhere below the level of consciousness they sensed that involved was some faculty which prevented them from making a record as good as usual in identifying the cards by telepathy. This faculty had the same effect on the telepathic process as a red traffic light or a red danger sign.

The Columbia scientists, in commenting on the unusually low record on the red cards, declare: "A negative result of this kind, from a purely statistical standpoint, is precisely as significant as an equally positive deviation would be.

'Picture of the Week'

The setting sun, tall timbers and the sound of the bugle as the flag is lowered at retreat is the scene captured by R. L. Doty, 1735 Eye street northwest to win the cash award in the Post's "Picture of the Week" competition. Mr. Doty used a Rolleiflex and Agfa plenachrome film. The exposure was 1/100th second at f.11 with a yellow filter.

How to Win 'Picture of Week' Contest, Get $5

All amateur photographers among The Post's readers are invited to submit entries in The Post's "Picture of the Week" competition. The prize-winning picture will appear on this page and there will be a prize of $5 for the winner, to be selected by The Post's photographic staff.

RULES:

1. Competition open to everyone except professional photographers and Post employes.
2. Submit as many entries as you wish.
3. Competition ends Wednesday, midnight. The winning picture will be published in the following Sunday's Post.
4. No prints will be returned. By submitting an entry, the contestant automatically gives permission to The Post to use it in any way.
5. The Post will pay $5 for the picture selected as the best of the week.
6. Address your entries to PIX, The Washington Post, Washington, D. C.
7. Write name and address plainly on back of each entry. Give date and title of contest and tell type of camera used, lighting conditions, etc.

Photographs entered in this week's competition must reach The Washington Post by midnight Wednesday, August 21. Do not duplicate pictures entered in previous contests; the best photograph in the group will be awarded the prize.

Liechtenstein To Issue New Set of Stamps

Liechtenstein announces a set of commemorative stamps for release on August 25. The stamps will portray Prince Johannes in various stages of his life. There will be five denominations: 20-rappen, red, depicts the prince as a child; 30-rappen, blue, and 50-rappen, green, Prince Johannes as a man; 1-franc, violet, the prince as an old man, and the 1-franc, 50-rappen, brown, the coat of arms of the country.

Japan announces that when the census of 1940 is begun a set of two new stamps in its commemoration will be issued, the date being set for October 1. This will be Japan's third census and it will be taken throughout the empire. Details as to values, designs and colors are yet to be announced.

Ascension has issued three new postage values in the design of the 3-d., of the 1939 series, showing a scene of nature with the portrait of the king at the right. They are: 1-d., orange and gray; 3-d., gray and black, and 4-d., ultramarine and black.

Nicaragua's stamp in honor of the fiftieth anniversary of the founding of the Pan-American Union finally appeared August 3. It is a large stamp, air mail, 1.25-c., denomination of various colors. The central design shows the Statue of Liberty over the United States shield, against a background of the mountainous Nicaraguan sea coast.

Brazil has reissued the 100-reis, orange, 400-r., light blue, and 1,000-r., blue green of 1920-21 series with a new watermark paper, "Casa da Moeda do Brasil," and the same watermarked paper for the 200-r., purple of 1933, and the 20-r., gray green, 100-r., red, and 200-r., blue green postage due stamps of 1913-23.

Panama, through a decree issued by President Augusto Boyd, has announced the overprinting of the recent Pan-American Union commemorative air mail stamp and certain denominations of the Panama Canal commemorative stamps of 1939.

There were issued 140,000 Pan-American Union air mails, 15-centavos, blue, and 50,000 will be overprinted "8 centavos," thus leaving but 3,000 of the originals in stock. Of the Panama Canal air mail commemorative, 15-c., ultramarine, 1,000,000 copies were issued and 70,000 will be overprinted "5 centavos," leaving 13,000 originals on hand.

Stamps

Gummed varieties of the special printing of United States postage stamps issued March 15, 1935, "without gum" have finally been offered for sale.

It will be recalled that after the episode of a collector trying to dispose of a sheet of the Mother's Day commemorative, imperforated and without gum, for $30,000, a lively debate in the House took place and finally, in order to give all collectors an opportunity to secure the stamps, Postmaster General James A. Farley ordered that the entire series be issued imperforate and without gum. The stamps were issued in full sheets and in blocks of four.

Soon after the stamps appeared rumors were current that the variety of these special printings were being used without gum. Now it is reported by Secretary of the Interior Harold L. Ickes that he has had these stamps gummed and that he has donated a large lot of such stamps to be sold at auction in New York the coming fall.

For years strong denials were always made when mention was made of any of these varieties being used with gum. The standard catalog clearly states that the special printings of the entire series were "without gum" and that was the intention of the department. But, according to Secretary Ickes, in his letter to Chancellor Harry Woodburn Chase, of New York University, who will supervise the auction sale, the following appears:

"Every stamp collector knows that when the regular issues of Park commemoratives were printed there were also printed a small number of imperforate stamps upon the same dies. I bought two complete sets of these imperforates that were gummed. I still have one complete set of these gummed imperforates, but the other set I have cut into to some extent in order to send to my stamp-collecting friends."

Postoffice Department officials were greatly concerned when the fact became known that some of the gummed varieties were to be sold at auction for refugee benefits. All officials agree that when the special printing was ordered of all of the varieties, including National Parks as well as commemoratives, that none were to be gummed.

So it appears that somebody passed along the word that Mr. Ickes could have some of his sheets gummed. Official releases ordered by Postmaster General Farley were all very explicit in stating that the sheets of all stamps were imperforate and ungummed. But during the year rumors that gummed varieties had been issued and even used in the mails persisted. Now the fact of gummed varieties has been confirmed by Mr. Ickes.

Many collectors regard these gummed varieties as illegitimate stamps for they were not issued in accordance with official announcements. While it is unquestioned that if these stamps are finally placed at auction, large prices will be secured for any sort of an error, legitimate or otherwise, will find a ready purchaser. Then there are many collectors who are of the opinion that the varieties not being authorized should not be placed on sale anywhere. The issue will be sharply drawn from now on.

The department declares that "so far as the Postoffice Department is concerned, there have never been any imperforate stamps issued that have been gummed." This is an undisputed fact.

On February 6, 1935, in order to clarify some misrepresentations which have been made to the issuance of United States postage stamps, and in order to leave no possible question in the mind of the public, as to the policy of the Postoffice Department, the following statement was made:

1. Collectors of stamps do not recognize varieties of stamps such as imperforate varieties, inverted center varieties, etc., unless these varieties have been sold to the public. Sometimes in the history of the department these have been sold over the postoffice counters by mistake on the part of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. Where this happens the stamp becomes a collector's "find" and often attains great value. In the case of several recent issues, a number of sheets in imperforate condition were struck off as samples but were not sold to the public This being so, they have no value from the collector's point of view because they do not fall under the general rule any more than proof copies, essays, or stamps marked "specimen."

2. Because question has been raised, however, in regard to these sheets, which were not sold to the public, and because of the possibility that in the future some of these sheets might find their way into the hands of the public and be given a fictitious and unwarranted value, the Postoffice Department has decided to take the one step possible to eliminate this for all time. The department will place on sale, through the Philatelic Agency in Washington, imperforate sheets of all the issues of which imperforate "specimen" or "souvenir" sheets have already been run, and these will be printed in sufficient numbers to meet the request of all collectors. Normally such imperforate stamps should not be available for postage, but it is, of course, impossible for every postmaster to check up on every stamp which passes through his office and they will, therefore, be available for postage.

3. Orders have been issued that hereafter no sheets of any stamp will be allowed outside of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing except in the form in which the stamp is available to the public over the counter.

From this it will be seen that no stamps of the imperforate variety should have been gummed for any purpose whatsoever.

The imperforate sheets were on sale at the Philatelic Agency from March 15 to June 15, 1935. There were 20 varieties sold, both in blocks of four and in full sheets, for which the department received $1,863,717.66. Of this sum, there were sold 184,347 full sheets valued at $1,467,972.70, while there were 936,262 stamps in blocks of four sold, valued at $195,744.96. In this entire lot there were no blocks or sheets sold that were gummed.

Postmasters have been notified that the Postoffice Department's stocks of the following varieties of commemorative stamps have been exhausted and cannot be further supplied: 3-cent Oregon, 1936; 3-cent Ordnance of 1787, 1936; 3-cent, 4-cent and 5-cent Army and Navy, 1937; 5-cent Virginia Dare, 1937; 3-cent Hawaii, 1937; 3-cent Northwest Territory, 1938; 3-cent Delaware, 1938, and 3-cent Ratification of the Constitution, 1938. It often happens that postmasters in many offices have supplies of commemorative stamps that have been removed from sale at the Philatelic Agency, and this notice serves to call attention to the exhaustion of all sales, not only at the Philatelic Agency but at postoffices.

The Collectors' Club, Branch 5, S. P. A., met Tuesday evening in the Thomson Community Center, President D. H. Reichgut presiding. Several applications for membership were received and new members elected. A. H. Whitney conducted another philatelic quiz, two teams, headed by P. D. Weeks and Alexander Halperson, participating. The latter team won the highest number of points, with Mrs. Grace L. MacKnight the largest individual scorer, who won the prize. A short auction followed. E. A. Grant officiating. There will be another meeting Tuesday evening. All stamp collectors are invited.

The cover bears three values of the stamps of Tonga and was mailed by Walter George Quensell, the original "Tin Can Mail" man who resides in the Tonga Island group in the South Sea. The cover was received in Baltimore on July 12, 1940, having arrived registered and air mail from the South Seas. The postoffice from which the cover was mailed is "Niufoou, Tonga."

Over the Bridge Player's Shoulder

By Marian H. Barre

A weary but triumphant cavalcade arrived in Washington late Monday with a world championship bridge crown among its effects. The wearers thereof were Oscar Brotman and Alvin Roth, the District's entry in the fourteenth annual Contract Championships at Asbury Park. Members of an intercity team, the local players had just captured the Nate B. Spingold trophy in the premier event for masters' foursomes. Their teammates were Bertram Lebhar, of New Rochelle, and Samuel Katz, of New York. It is the first time for a world title to be held by a Capitalite.

The champions are both Federal employes; Roth works in the Government Printing office and Brotman in the Securities and Exchange Commission. Although only in their middle 20s they have long been recognized as brilliant and resourceful players. But even their most ardent admirers were astonished when they defeated the von Zedtwitz team. Sam Fry, jr., Edward Hymes, jr., Charles Lochridge and Myron Fuchs made up the Baron's five-man team. It was the only seeded lineup that survived the upsets of the previous knock-out rounds in which the world-famous Four Aces and the Goren outfit had gone down in defeat.

In the semifinals the Roth team won by 680 points over Baltimoreans who often have worsted their District opponents. For the fans at home, this revenge was sweet. Baltimore players were Col. Robert Gill, Arthur Schlessinger, Clagett Bowie and Charles Shapiro. After Bowie was called away by illness in his family, Samuel Yessel, of Philadelphia, was put in. It was this lineup that eliminated the Four Aces.

The von Zedtwitz team entered the finals via a 5,770-point triumph over Mr. and Mrs. George Kennedy, Robert Chatkin and Mrs. Valerie Klein, all of New York. They entered as overwhelming favorites in the betting, the odds running as high as 20 to 1. Every member of the team is a national luminary, and the game is scored by total points, the method considered the fairest test in bridge, where the element of luck is reduced to a minimum.

Against this aggregation of talent the young District stars won by 2,570 points in a 60-board match, after trailing by 2,700 points at the half-way mark.

It was the greatest triumph ever achieved by local players. The tocsins rang in Philadelphia and New York, the great metropoles that always shared the palms of bridge. But in the District it was telephone bells that rang all night long to rouse the sleepers with the stirring news that Roth and Brotman are world champions.

It is inevitable that the masters' team victory should overshadow all other exploits of the Capital group playing at Asbury, but even without this major victory the local record is outstanding. About 20 Washingtonians took part, everyone distinguished himself in some game.

Playing in the national match for mixed teams of four, Dr. and Mrs. A. J. Steinberg, Louis Newman and Mrs. Lottie Planco, of Long Island, lost the match by half a board to von Zedtwitz, Miss Marie Black, Henry Chanin and Mrs. Olive Peterson. In spite of the closeness of the score, the local team finished third as the Philadelphia team of Edward Ellenbogan, Mrs. J. J. Mitchell, Charles Solomon and Mrs. Ben Golder tied for top and then lost the title in the play-off.

Mrs. Irene Surguy and Gene Hermann led the record field of 64 pairs in the initial session of masters' pair play. It was the first time Mrs. Surguy has competed in a national tournament. The masters' title was won by Harry Fishbein, a defending champion, paired with Morie Elis instead of his former partner, Robert Appleyard. Fishbein was the only defender who retained a title.

Roth and Brotman won the opening round of the men's pair game which was the curtain-raising event, thus putting Washington in the news from the start. They finished third. Winners were M. D. Maier, of New York, and Robert McPherran, of Philadelphia, who made the most decisive victory of the tournament. Katz and Lebhar also finished among the leaders in this event in which 50 pairs were entered. Oswald Jacoby and John Crawford, defending champions, finished in eleventh place.

A virtually unknown pair, Mrs. John Waidlich, of Rosemont, and Mrs. Edith Atkinson, of Wayne, Pa., won the women's match. Newman's partner in the mixed team game, Mrs. Planco, and Mrs. Henry Drescher, of New York, were runners-up, trailing less than a point behind top score. The two finest women players in the Nation, Mrs. R. C. Young, of Philadelphia, and Mrs. A. M. Sobel, of New York, were defending champions. After getting off to a bad start they recovered sufficiently to finish seventh. There were no Washington women entered in this game.

In the President's Pair event, Mr. and Mrs. Bernard Rosson, of this city, led one round. Other local players entered in it included Mrs. Alma Byrne, A. M. Sheppard and P. E. Henninger. Mrs. Byrne and Sheppard also played on a masters' team.

S. Garton Churchill, of Silver Spring, Md., paired with von Zedtwitz, made one of the fine partnerships that fought its way to the top after a slow start in the masters' pair game. In the team match when opposed by the von Zedtwitz team, Churchill's lineup lost the knock-out round. His teammates were Cecil Head and Travers Legros, of New York, and Lawrence Weiss, of Boston.

Ely Culbertson, who has ceased playing tournament bridge, made his first appearance at a national tournament since he addressed the Nationals in Washington in 1937. Culbertson presented some of the Asbury trophies.

Although the kibitzers' gallery was increased this year to about 100 seats the sign of standing room only had to be used constantly. The 1940 spectator crop was unusually courteous. Whenever the master of ceremonies enthused over a brilliant play, the audience dutifully clapped. Total entries in the tournament hit a new attendance record.

And now duplicate fans are preparing to depart for the "Land of the Sky," where the third annual Southern Appalachian Championships are on in Asheville, N. C., this week. The opening date is August 23.

• • • •

The closest duplicate game played here this year was held at the Kennedy-Warren last Monday. With 15 pairs in the game, there was a three-way tie for top, while two other pairs tied for second place, scoring only a half-point less than the leading teams.

What Scientists are doing

By Howard W Blakeslee,

Associated Press Science Editor

Portland, Ore., Aug. 17.—Apple seeds are rich in a muscle-regulating substance, probably a vitamin, whose discovery was described today at the University of Oregon Medical School.

Eating ground apple seeds, or drinking the oil which is pressed from them, both caused remarkable recoveries in animals near death with wasted muscles.

The apple seed properties were found in experiments in the nutritional research laboratory under direction of Dr. Ira A. Manville, clinical associate professor of medicine.

The muscular diseases from which the animals, rabbits, guinea pigs and rats, suffered were experimental, that is, induced, but they were precisely the same as a serious class of human ills. Lou Gehrig's trouble is one of this kind

In the animals the wasted muscles and paralysis were caused by lack of vitamin E. This is the so-called fertility vitamin. Whether it is solely a fertility vitamin is beginning to be doubted. But it is certainly a powerful nerve and muscle vitamin. The muscular weakness without E is due to wasting of muscle.

In the animal paralysis, Dr. Manville said there may be some other missing factor of diet besides Vitamin E. The nature of this other factor is unknown.

Animals with muscles so flabby that they seemed paralyzed were restored to near normal appearance in 24 hours by apple seed oil. They had been too weak to eat. In two or three days they were eating heartily. They recovered promptly.

The oil was a complete preventive for the muscular paralysis even when all Vitamin E was removed from diet.

Wheat germ oil is a cure for this muscular trouble in animals, but Dr. Manville said it costs about $12 a pint, while the new apple seed remedy should be cheap. He explained that the seeds are a waste product of processed apples and that Washington's Yakima district produces 25 to 40 tons of this waste annually.

The Washington Philatelist

By William M. Stuart.

While official announcement has not been made, it is more than likely a new series of "National Defense Stamps" will be issued before the end of this year. It is understood the Administration has been considering such an issue for some time, and an announcement may be expected shortly.

STUART.

Postal officials have suggested a series consisting of three denominations—one, three and five-cent, with designs and minor details to be decided later. Proceeds derived from the sale of these stamps will be used for purposes other than supplying revenue for national defense.

It is a known fact that the Postoffice Department very recently refused to approve the suggested issue of a semipostal stamp. Many foreign nations issue such stamps, the surtax being used for specific charities. Those indorsing the so-called "Red Cross" issue wanted the surtax used for national defense, but all such suggestions were turned down. A statement explaining the reason for issuing the new series will be made public in due season. As usual, with each new issue, the cry of "too many stamps" will again be heard.

In these tragic war days stamp collecting goes on as usual and items are still being issued from the nations in conflict which find greater favor with the philatelist. The new series will be awaited with deep interest, and it is hoped the designs will be in accordance with the spirit of the times.

Carroll County Fair Attracts Md Farmers

TANEYTOWN was the scene of the forty-third annual Carroll County Fair last week when farmers and their families from all parts of Maryland came to take part in the festivities and to exhibit their stock and products.

It was an old-fashioned fair of the type that has become an American institution, augmented with the latest wrinkles in 1940 entertainment. Displays of cattle and poultry, home-made linens and jam vied with beauty contests in which the loveliest girls of Carroll and Frederick counties were selected, and a public wedding. Jimmie Lynch and his dare-devil auto racers contrasted with the traditional horseracing, which held sway for three days at the fairgrounds track. Champion hogs and homespun quilts brought blue ribbons and glory to their proud owners, and the glittering midway thrilled the youngsters.

Culmination of the five-day fete came last Friday, with the grand parade of the livestock exhibited by the 4-H Club and the Seniors, harness races and other entertainments.

IRATE ADULT RAVEN

Perched on a stub protruding from a dead tree, this irate raven annoyed by the intrusion near its nesting place, tried to appease its wrath by hammering away at the dead wood. After breaking off large pieces it would shake them vigorously, then let them fall to the ground. A telephoto lens was used in making this picture.

Amateur Photographer Scores A "Beat" With Raven Pictures

FOREST RANGERS in nearby George Washington National Forest and Shenandoah National Park have offered monetary prizes to week-end campers and CCC enrollees should they be lucky enough to obtain a picture of a raven, a most elusive bird seldom seen in this section of the country.

W. BRYANT TYRRELL, a resident of Takoma Park, Md., has succeeded in obtaining a number of interesting pictures of both adult and young ravens. These photos were made over a period of a year during which the photographer did some hazardous climbing and often had to hide in improvised blinds from where he operated his camera while in a cramped position.

FIRST time he heard the croak of a raven was while scaling Old Rag Mountain in Shenandoah National Park, May, 1937. At that time the birds were flying high and he was unable to locate their nesting place. On a later visit, with the aid of ropes, he and a party of friends ascended an almost inaccessible ledge just as three young ravens left their nest, in time to capture a fourth, the only remaining bird. After pictures were made the youngster was liberated.

DURING the past year Mr. Tyrrell continued his visits to the nesting sites and after searching numerous cliffs found a small crevice on the face of a pile of large boulders where he discovered a nest containing five naked young birds, ugly and grotesque, just about a week old.

THE older ravens who resented the intrusion kept flying overhead, uttering guttural notes though at no time did they come close. Each week, until the youngsters were able to leave the nest unassisted, Mr. Tyrrell climbed the mountain ledge to obtain pictures showing development of the young. Bands furnished by the Biological Survey were affixed to the legs of the birds. The greatest difficulty encountered was in trying to obtain good pictures of the wary adult birds. A camera equipped with long telephoto lens, difficult to handle where a misstep might result in severe injury, made this phase of the picture-taking job a real hazard.

1 FIRST PICTURE. After a tiresome climb the nest was located in a hidden crevice. In the picture above there are five young ravens, just about a week old. Photo was made before Tyrrell started to untangle the family.

3 LONG WIDE BILLS. Each week the quintet was taken from the nest to be weighed and measured after which they were photographed. In picture above they have the appearance of ravens—then three weeks old.

4 OUTGROWING THEIR HOME. About the fourth week they began to feel as if their quarters were not large enough. Four of the five can be seen in this photo, the fifth is hidden.

5 PIN FEATHERS start sprouting. Now banded with ringlets furnished by the Biological Survey, the youngsters were beginning to flap their wings a bit although unable to attempt a takeoff.

6 ABOUT READY TO FLY. Now a noisy member of the feathered set, this fledgling was protesting loudly as it tried to skip out of camera range. An empty nest was all the photographer found when he climbed Old Rag the following week.

Youngsters Find Hobbies Can Prove Profitable

POSSIBLY you have heard about the Bright Idea Club. The organization of talented 'teen age boys and girls was formed by Miss Madeline Gray, a teacher who had paid special attention to children and their doings and the methods whereby the activities of children can be steered into worthwhile channels.

THE club, formed a year ago, now boasts 25,000 members all over the United States and Canada. Every member has a hobby in which he, or she, is something of an expert. The club idea was started so that youngsters might obtain advanced education with earnings obtained from sales of handicraft, thus furthering their schooling with the hobbies they started in fun.

Most novel of the bright ideas is that from which Joseph Lesser (above) earns a neat income. He dips old phonograph records into hot water and fashions fruit dishes, candy holders and pottery vases from them. Gilbert Fortunuff (below) uses burnt matchsticks to miniature cathedrals and bridges.

"Roughing It" at Cataloochee Ranch, Near Waynesville, N. C.

DUDE ranch vacations have become increasingly pouplar within the last few years. Popular dude ranching consists of outfitting oneself with a collection of chaps, ten-gallon hats, decorated boots and spurs and sitting on the rail of a corral to be photographed. But the kind of dude ranching that calls for what it takes, meaning endurance, our photographer found at Tom Alexander's Cataloochee Ranch, near Waynesville N. C.

Down at Cataloochee, vacationists take a ten-day trek through the Smoky Mountains of North Carolina amid some of the scenic wonders of America. The trip is made under personal supervision of Rancher Alexander and his riders, during which time the party "roughs it" in the manner of the riders of the open range in frontier days.

Rancher Alexander (above) gives his wife some last minute instructions about where the packtrain should be met along the route and what supplies should be brought from the ranch before the party leaves on the trip.

READY FOR TREK THROUGH THE SMOKIES

The riders gather outside the Cataloochee Ranch house. A suprising number of women make the trip, and some of them go back again and again.

COME AND GET IT

Mountain air and exercise make a combination that puts a razor edge on the appetitie. The most finicky eaters succumb to the occasion and tear into the meals prepared in range style. The three young riders at left wash dishes at nearby brook.

FIRST NIGHT OUT

the packtrain makes camp at mountain cabin and after supper the riders listen to a little mountain music. The center of attraction here is "Cal," mountaineer virtuoso, who strums a mean guitar.

Footwear Fashions Before Wedgies

SINCE the advent of the open-toed slipper, which was quickly followed by the wedgies, many have wondered what the next advance in feminine shoe styles will be like. That designers have something to work from may be realized by examining the pictures of museum pieces shown here. Part of an unusual exhibit of weird and wonderful footwear in a Boston museum.

This strange shoe is a very old Persian pegged sandal, carved from a block of wood. The wearing of this type footwear required special education as the sole means of keeping the shoe on the foot was by means of the knob that fitted between the toes.

The Greater Chambers Company has built the best organization possible with these able directors to serve with the highest ideals in final rites with efficiency and understanding.

WM. F. ELLIOT has 50 years' experience in Funeral Directing, dating from the time that he conducted the first funeral from Johns Hopkins Hospital in 1890.

RICHARD K. HARVEY has 30 years' experience, succeeding as a Funeral Director from his father, who conducted the funeral of Abraham Lincoln.

FREDERICK T. BYRNE has 26 years' experience. Mr. Byrne is a former Navy man and he has been selected to conduct the funerals of many notables of the Navy.

GEORGE C. DUVALL has 22 years' experience. He was born and raised in Washington and served with his father, Lewis E. Duvall, as a Funeral Director. He is an expert embalmer.

FREDERICK LEE STUART has 20 years' experience and has often officiated at prominent funerals in the Congressional realm. Mr. Stuart has served on Capitol Hill as a Funeral Director for many years.

ROBERT E. TOLSON has 16 years' experience and is manager of Chambers' Main Office at 14th and Chapin streets. Mr. Tolson is a former employe of the Southern Railway, where his father still works. Mr. Tolson is the youngest of this group and is one of the most outstanding experts in the undertaking business.

The combined periods that these famed directors have served amounts to 208 years. Thus competent, understanding service can be secured with any one of these directors at Chambers' four big, modern, air-conditioned Funeral Homes.

How Congressional Library's 1,000,000 Visitors Spend Their Time

By Christine Sadler

Into the lumbering, green-domed structure that houses the Library of Congress yearly go more than 1,000,000 visitors. Some 400,000 of them linger long enough to use the main reading room and 21,000 of them tarry in the genealogical division to find out about family trees.

Real scholars among them—generally speaking—get study rooms assigned and may settle down for six months. The library has 226 individual study rooms, all in use, and approximately 200 study tables set up in the stacks.

Largest and best-equipped in the world, the Library of Congress has approximately 6,000,000 books and pamphlets, almost 3,000,000 maps, charts and musical compositions, and "uncounted" manuscripts.

It is a student's paradise, be that student interested in Americana, Orientalia, fine arts, folk music Indic manuscripts, on the Creek nation.

Certificate of copyright for sheet music is made out by Gwendolyn Emerson, recorder. It will be good for 28 years, can be renewed for 28 more.

Smallest book in Library of Congress—Rose Garden of Omar Khayyam—is 27-page volume being scanned through microscope by James M. Lessley. It measures 5 by 7 millimeters.

Chief attractions of the library as far as visitors making a quick turn through the halls are concerned seem to be the Declaration of Independence, the Constitution exhibit, the Gettysburg address, and the Gutenberg Bible. They draw the most exclamations and the most rapt expressions.

The Hispanic Room opened last October and the Whittall Pavillion completed a year ago in March are new and popular additions.

The Library of Congress was established in 1800 and opened in 1802 with 964 volumes and 9 maps. Ten years later, it contained 3,076 volumes. Many papers and books were destroyed by the British in 1814, although a belated evacuation saved most of them.

To repair the war damage, Thomas Jefferson offered his private library to the Government. He asked $23,700 for his 6,700 volumes and this was agreed to—despite cries of extravagance and protests against the "irreligious" character of many of his books.

Jefferson's collection formed the foundation of the library until 1851, when two-thirds of it was destroyed in a disastrous fire. Not until the copyright law was amended in 1870 did the library begin its rapid modern growth. Under this amendment, two copies of every "published item" must be depos-

NEW LIBRARIAN of Congress Archibald MacLeish is at work in his office with Secretary Thursa Bakey. As a poet, MacLeish won the Pulitzer Prize with "Conquistador." As a journalist, he worked for Fortune Magazine and once wrote a story in which he declared Congressmen to be better businessmen than most businessmen. As a librarian, he has won approval of those who once disputed his ability.

ited in the Library of Congress in order to perfect copyright.

During the 70 years since copyright work became the business of the library, entries have totaled almost 7,000,000. Copyright fees for last year ran above $300,000. We learned that 99 per cent of books received under the copyright law go into the library collection, but that any of them could have been refused space in the stacks.

Readers at the Library of Congress, we learned, have about "average" taste when it comes to current books. It was like living the decade over to be told that from 1929 through 1938, respectively, fiction books checked out and in most often were "All Quiet on the Western Front," "Cimarron," "The Good Earth," "Anthony Adverse," "Green Light," "Gone With the Wind" and "TheYearling." Beginning with "The Good Earth" and excepting "Green Light," the favorites held their places for two years each.

Modern growth of the library has been under the direction of Dr. Herbert Putnam, who now has title of Librarian of Congress Emeritus. The large air-conditioned annex which makes research a summer as well as a winter possibility was occupied during the last year of his active regime in 1939.

AT CARD CATALOG files: David J. Haykin, acting chief catalog division; George A. Schwegmann, jr., director of union catalog.

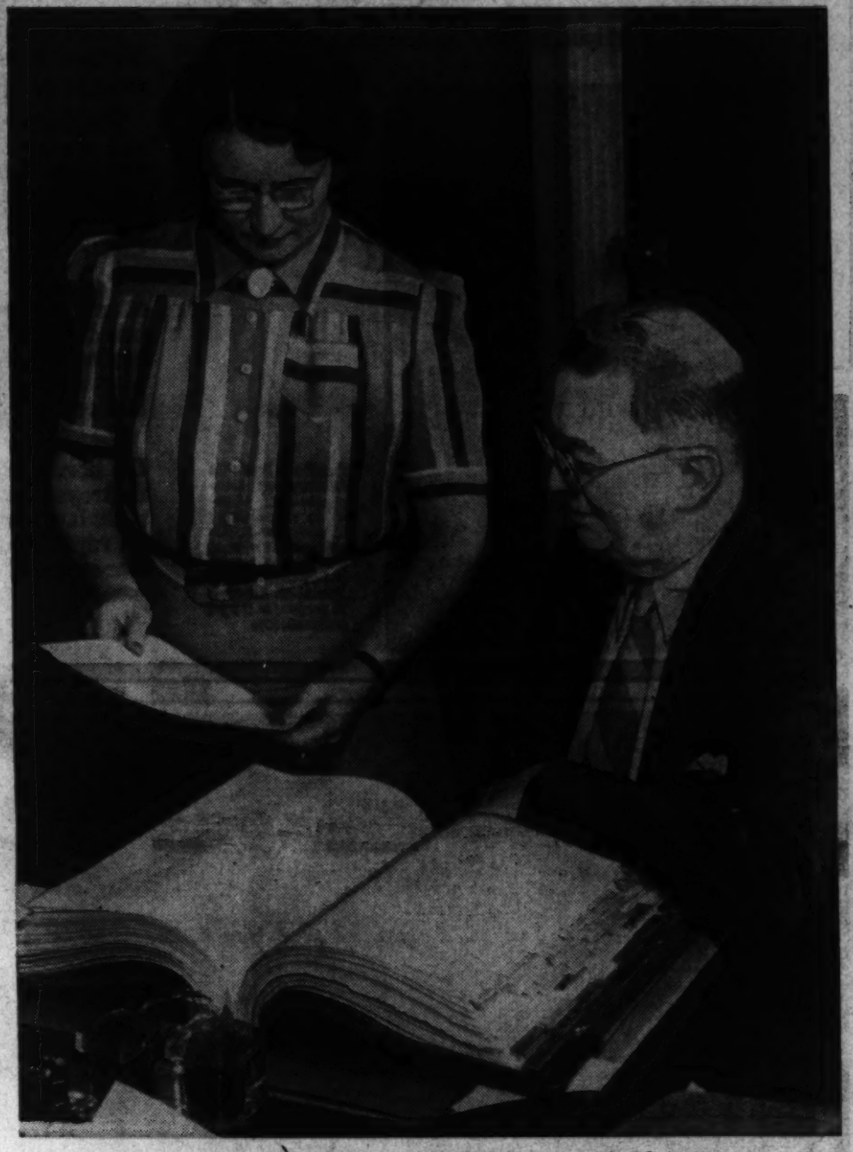
Coming to the post of Librarian on October 1 a year ago was Archibald MacLeish, 48-year-old "poet, businessman, soldier, journalist, athlete, lawyer." When President Roosevelt announced his nomination he also called him a "gentleman, scholar and administrator."

In all respects, Librarian MacLeish is measuring up, now winning praise from the group which a year ago said he might be all the above but still he was not a librarian.

The big marble annex—which cost $18,000,000, in comparison to parent structure cost of approximately $6,000,000—has room for 10,000,000 volumes. So the future does not loom as a period of static.

Appropriations for the Library of Congress run to above $3,000,000, exclusive of appropriations for mechanical and structural operations, repairs and equipment of the buildings and grounds. These are under jurisdiction of the Architect of the Capitol.

DR. LUTHER H. EVANS, head of reference department, and David C. Mearns, superintendent of reading rooms, meet in the stacks. Both are happy because annex building has enabled them to take down "standing room only" signs from their divisions. You're right, both read for recreation.



DISBURSING OFFICER Wade H. Rabbitt and Ida M. Troutman, assistant disbursing officer, go over the Library of Congress books. can tell you that running a national library is no shoe-string business. Despite copyright "gifts," more than $200,000 are spent on purchases of books and papers during most years. Recent year expenses cover books for blind, sound-reproduction records, photoduplicating and air-conditioning.

IN THE MUSIC DIVISION Richard S. Hill and Edward N. Waters examine Leoncavallo's original "I Pagliacci," purchased as memorial to Florence Hinkel Witherspoon.

Concerts Held at Library

Busy members of the Budapest String Quartet above are, left to right, Josef Roismann and Alexander Schneider, violins; Mischa Schneider, violoncello, and Boris Kroyt, viola. All four instruments are Stradivari—and the Library of Congress has a third Stradivari violin. The five were presented by Gertrude Clarke Whittall.

Concerts are held at the Library of Congress, sponsored by the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation. Last year approximately 40,000 attended them and most of them were broadcast.

In addition to classical collections, the library has magnificent collection of American folk songs on phonograph records.

BETTY TOWNE IS AT PIANO in music room. Stradivari instruments were heard at 13 concerts given in Coolidge Auditorium last year. Sometimes, all five are played at once.

Selecting Book From Library's 6,000,000

Among approximately 400,000 persons who will use reading rooms of Library of Congress this year is Louise M. Erk, daughter of former Representative Edwin F. Erk, of Pittsburgh, who is pictured on this page.

If you've ever wondered what library workers were doing while you waited for your book to show up, these pictures will tell you. The whole transaction takes less than 20 minutes—despite the fact it often seems "hours." The wonder is, of course, that 6,000,000 books can be arranged and assembled in such order that you can select any one of them and expect to read it the same day.

Reading rooms at the library are open to everyone, only requirements for use being "reasonable decorum and modest dress." In general, also, there are but few regulations about use of rare books. Facsimiles of rare volumes must be used, if available, however, to preserve the originals.

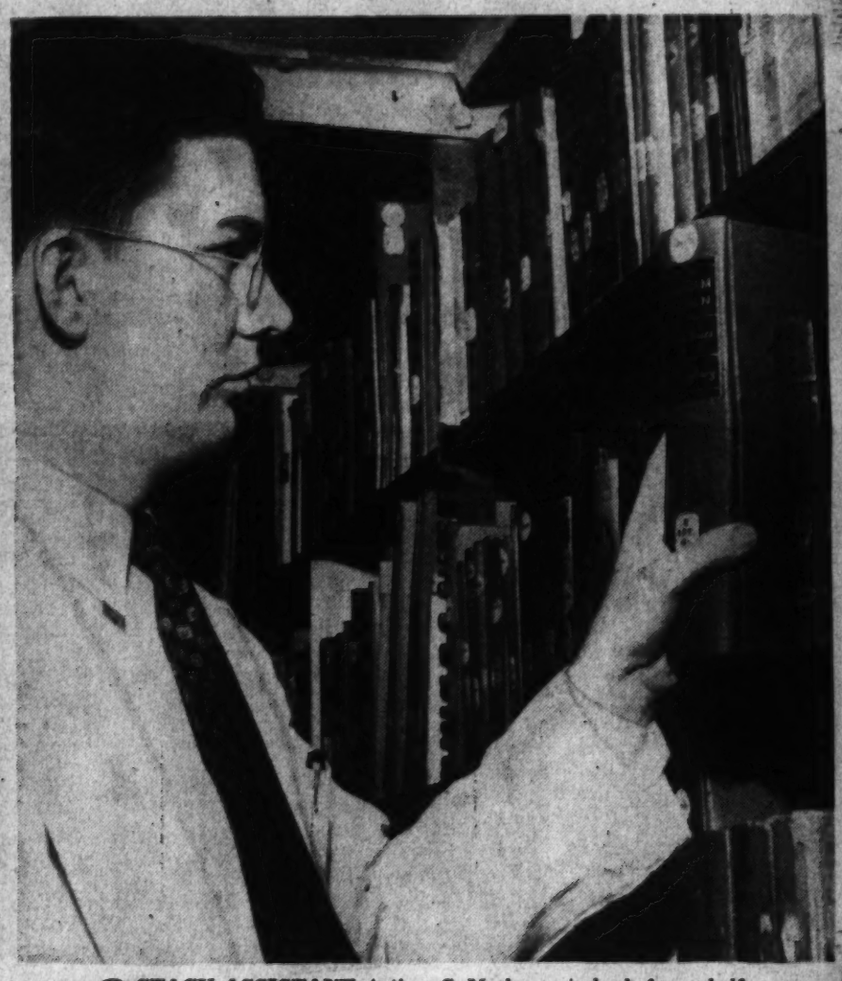
1 MISS ERK wishes to have a look at "Abraham Lincoln: The War Years," by Carl Sandberg. She uses the card catalog, keeps turning through until "Sandberg" appears.

2 IN ORDER to get card where she can see its numbers, she pulls drawer onto table where white slips and pencils are available. Slip is filled out with title, author and book's number. Number means more to librarian than anything else.

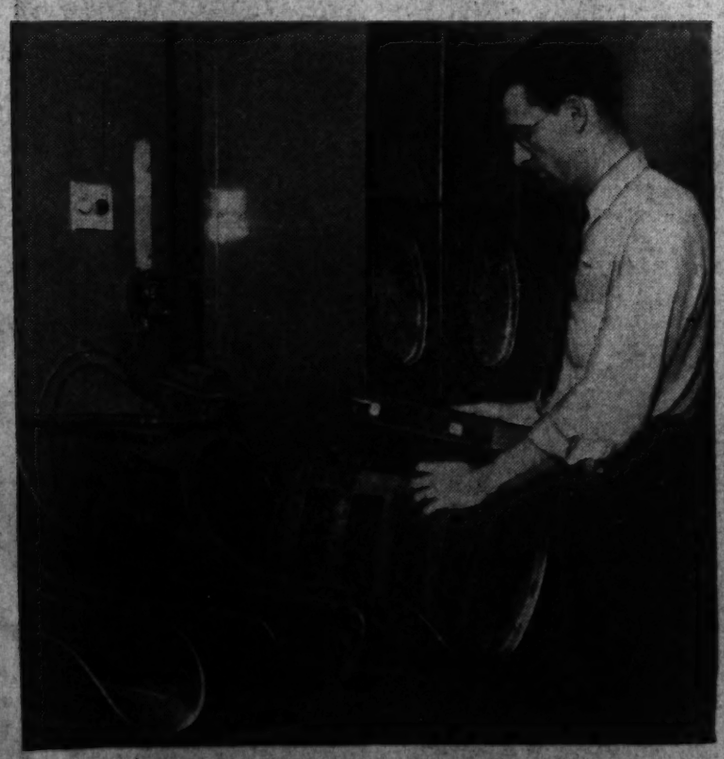
3 SLIP IS HANDED to Lawson M. McKenzie, reference assistant, who scrutinizes number to see whether little white paper should be routed to poetry, ancient Greek literature or just what division. Decides it looks like "recent American biography."

4 INTO CAPSULE and down the pneumatic tube to stacks goes Miss Erk's request, with McKenzie still officiating. Miss Erk, meanwhile, is assigned to seat at table to await book's appearance. She can study her surroundings, just bide her time in repose, or browse among reference books.

5 IN CONTROL ROOM Lawrence A. Olson removes slip from capsule and sees that it reaches person who will find the book. With readers running to more than 1,000 some days, quick routine planning and charting are necessary. There is a central control room in main building and another in the annex.



6 STACK ASSISTANT Arthur C. Marlow gets book from shelf, where he found it lined up beside other biographies of Lincoln written through the years. When a book is as popular as this, the library may have as many as a dozen copies on hand. Only readers permitted behind stacks to get own books are those engaged in "serious work."



7 INTO BIG CAPSULE which will take it back to reading room Leo W. Tighe puts the book Miss Erk desired. By means of pneumatic tubes which connect annex and the main library, books from either place are available. Taking books out of Library of Congress is matter entirely different from going there to read them. Borrowers are limited to those covered in laws passed by Congress.

8 Here's Miss Erk's book right back where the little white slip started its journey. McKenzie hands it to Messenger Lloyd Millegan and says, "Take it to the girl waiting in chair 563." Members of Congress, Supreme Court Justices, heads of Government departments and certain other Government and judicial officials can borrow books from the Library of Congress under the law. "Productive scholars" can be granted same permission.

9 MESSENGER MILLEGAN gives Miss Erk the book she ordered and the sequence is ended. Ranking along with Sandburg's new book with Library of Congress readers during recent months have been Dr. Douglas Southall Freeman's "R. E. Lee," Maj. George Fielding Eliot's "The Ramparts We Watch," and—would you believe it?—Margaret Mitchell's "Gone With the Wind." Nonfiction leaders of past five years have included "Importance of Living," "How to Win Friends and Influence People," "Man the Unknown" and "North to the Orient."

Politicians, Students Use Library

Representative Louis Ludlow, of Indiana (above) comes regularly to the Library of Congress to use the research and reading room reserved for lawmakers. Comparatively few of his colleagues use room to the extent he does, finding it more convenient usually to have the books brought to them.

Not only books, but "verse and chapter" are provided legislators who desire them. Senator Jones, for instance, can let it be known that he is about to make a speech on Aztec culture and ask the library for all quotations on the subject from George Washington's writings. If the father of his country wrote about Aztecs at all, Senator Jones soon will know what, when and where.

Other pictures on this page were taken in different parts of the library and give an idea of the many facilities available to students, be they real scholars interested in Orientalia or just casual readers who run in to scan home-town papers.

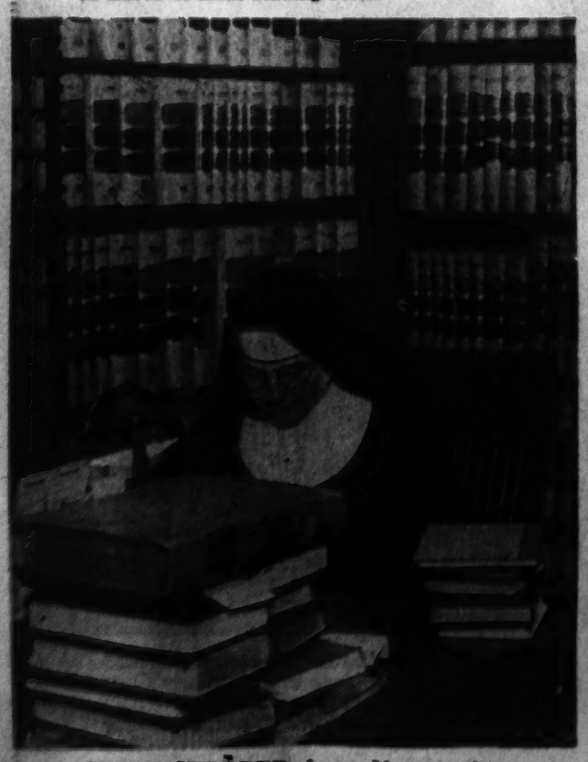
IN THE FINE ARTS DIVISION Architect Frederick Nichols does research for historic American building survey started in old PWA days and being continued by National Park Service.

DR. T. S. PALMER, visitor in Fine Arts Division, examines drawings of early American homes. With him are Ruth Osgood, secretary in division, and Virginia Daiker, of survey project.

RICHARD LaROCHE chases reference in alcove of main reading room.

UNIVERSITY OF TEXAS professor, D. S. Strong and wife are "researching."

IN DIVISION OF ORIENTALIA Dr. Dean R. Wickes continues his research in land use for Soil Conservation Service, learning from Chinese—apparently finding their books easy reading



SISTER MILDRED, from Mount St. Scholastica College in Kansas, does research for her next book.

IN GENEALOGY ROOM, Mrs. Gilbert J. Cox and Earl Chedester, of Detroit, trace down family histories.

FAMILIAR LIBRARY SCENE to Washingtonians is this in the room where newspapers are arranged by States. Students interested in quick check-up on what editors over country said about recent event come here, but usually readers just want to know what's going on "back home."

Library Workers Busy on Defense Data

With so much to be read and limited time to read it in, all busy people are grateful for research assistance. Libraries no longer look upon themselves merely as places where books are stored. To be beneficial, information cannot be merely static.

Hence the rapid growth of the legislative reference service of the Library of Congress. More than 6,000 requests for research aid came to the service last year. All Senators asked for compilations of material, and 399 members of the House. Many Government officials also use the service, which today is devoting many hours to voluminous research for the National Defense Commission.

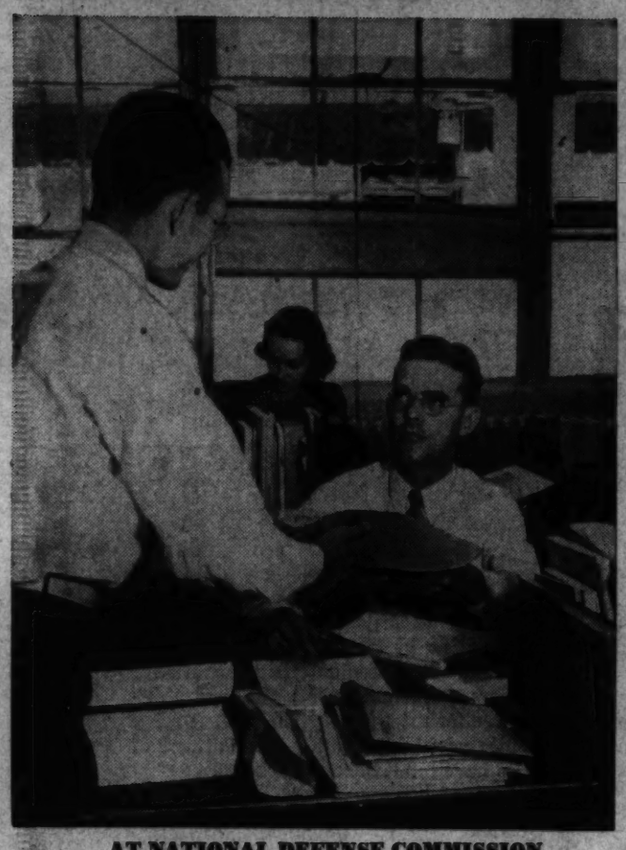
Recognizing the modern idea that knowing where and how to find the answer is more important than trying to keep facts indexed in the mind, those who use the service supervise their research by asking questions about what they want to know. Research assistants find the "chapter and verse" and pick out material with direct bearing on subject.

When time permits, independent research is undertaken by the service in compiling data that is considered of current worth. Illustrations of subjects explored are "United States Senators Who Have Resigned While Serious Charges Were Pending," "Selected Information Concerning Workers Alliance in America," and "List of Wars in Which England Has Engaged."

IN LEGISLATIVE reference division, Lucy Salamanca, chief of section, takes request for research help. Researcher Elizabeth Longley is busy on problem at left. Used mostly by Congressmen, division is called on increasingly by all Government departments and now particularly by National Defense Commission.

WHILE Mrs. Bonnie Lane Hilton types request in triplicate, Research Assistant Millard M. Bennett takes another request by telephone. Lawmaking calls for past several weeks have been filled with questions about conscription and conditions surrounding its application in this and other countries.

WILLIAM BUNDY AND DR. DANIEL SCHWARTZ, both assigned full time to research work requested by National Defense Commission, ponder the answers to hundreds of questions. In World War records they found much illuminating material about purchase of defense materials gone untouched since World War days.



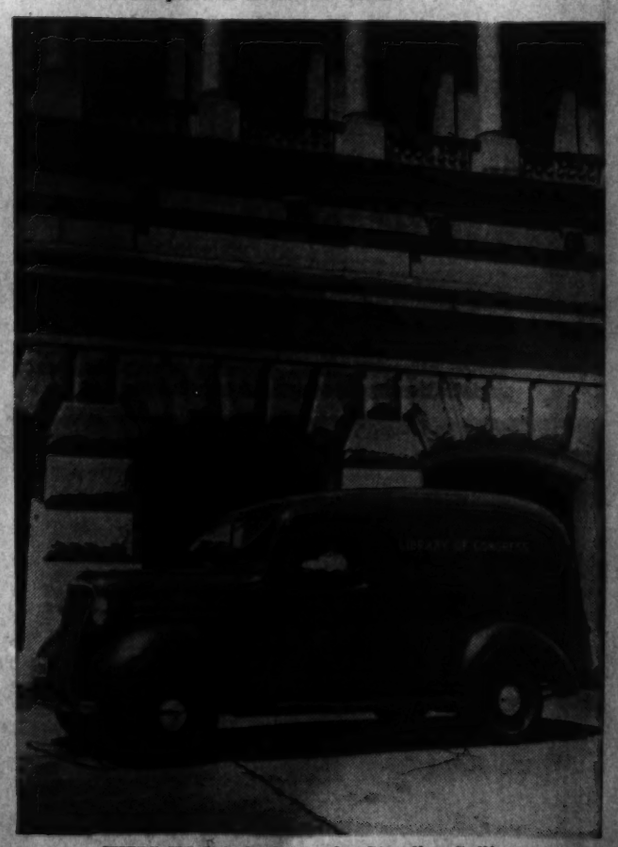
AT NATIONAL DEFENSE COMMISSION library, set up in Munitions Building, Thomas R. Baldwin, research assistant assigned by Library of Congress, receives material sent from library.

GENERAL VIEW of Room 2724 at Munitions Building, where special library has been set up for National Defense Commission. Research Assistant Baldwin, assigned full time to job from Library of Congress, is using telephone at left. Most of the workers are on loan from other agencies. The work here is coordinated with work of regular legislative reference service at Congressional Library.

BACK AT MAIN LIBRARY, Dr. Schwarts chases an answer into file filled with newspaper clippings. Clippings, speeches, reports, books and all printed records are examined in compilation of defense data.

RAYMOND E. MANNING, chief of economic research in legislative reference division, and Richard A. Humphrey, assistant, compile daily summary of all legislative and executive actions in regard to national defense. Thus the current record is kept up to date. The division gets out a mimeographed bulletin weekly to list all public general bills introduced in Congress. This is distributed to members of Congress and to other interested persons.

LYDIA ALBERTSON, senior stenographer, types one of hundreds of reports now being sent from Library of Congress to National Defense Commission. Ordinarily, she makes five copies of the report, big tables and all.



THIS TRUCK, driven by Standley Sullivan, makes hourly trips from Library of Congress to National Defense Commission headquarters in Federal Reserve Building carrying research material and bringing back questions.

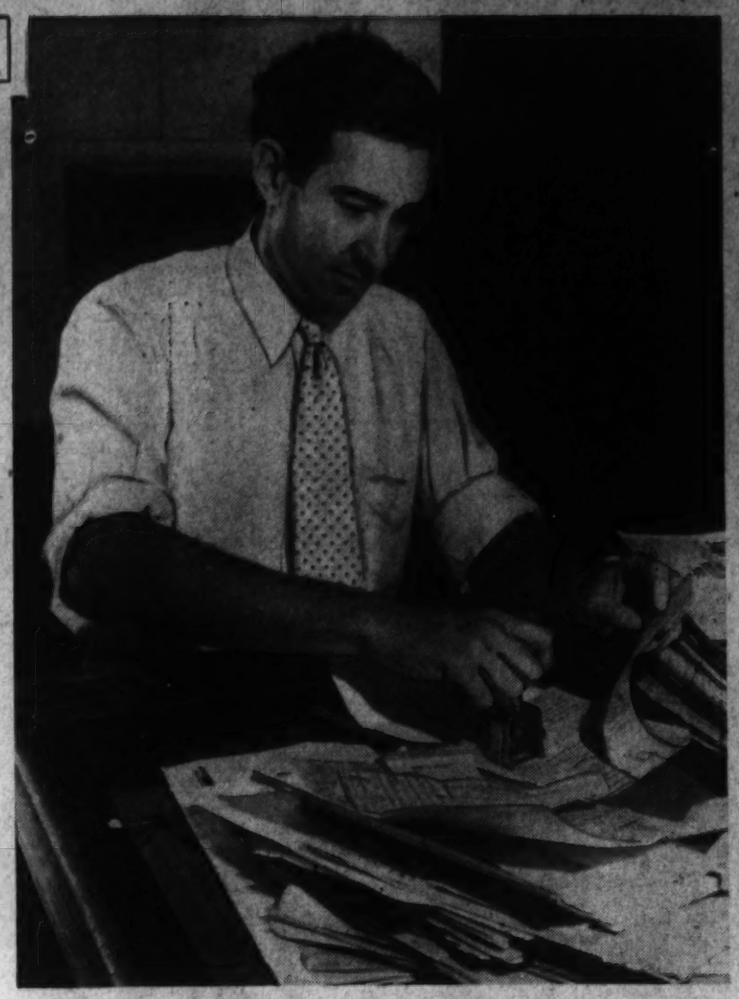
OPENING MATERIAL received for copyrighting are William E. Swain, chief of mail section, and Mail Clerks John E. Strong and Orin S. McFarland.

Perfecting a Copyright

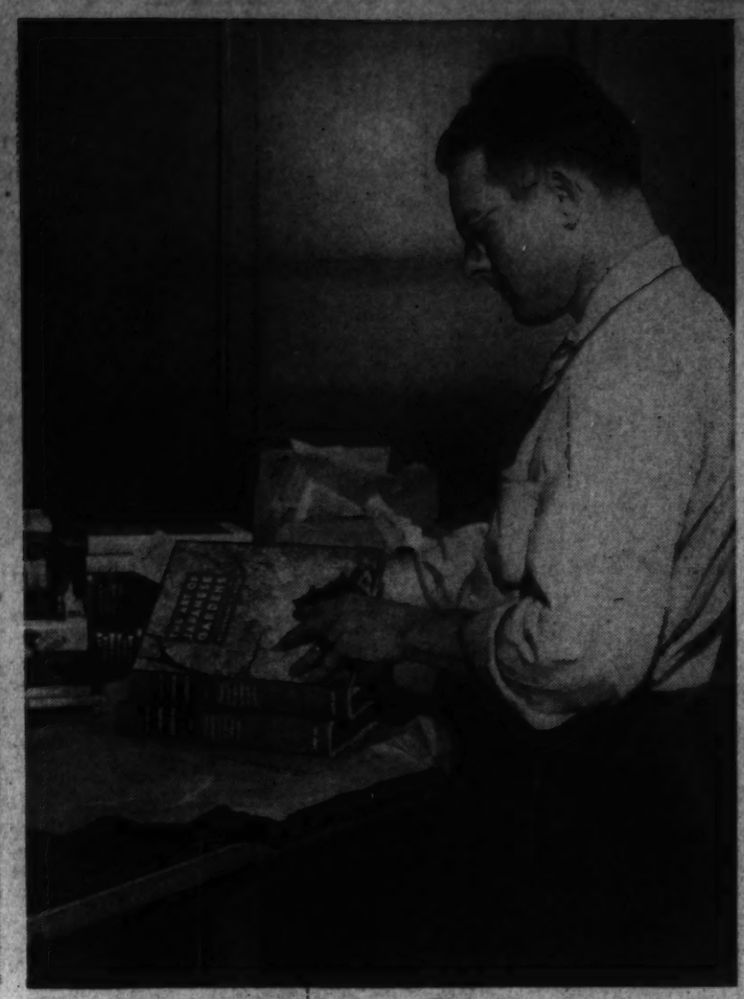
To perfect copyright on printed material, two copies must be deposited with the Library of Congress and fee included. This rule applies to newspapers, magazines, pamphlets and photographs, the same as to books.

Registration fee for published works is $2. For unpublished works, photographs and renewals, it is $1. Fees are covered into the Treasury and not applied directly to maintenance of the Copyright Office. Income of the office runs around $300,000 annually.

Total number of registrations last year ran to almost 200,000. From these, 83,186 volumes were transferred to the library. Newspapers, handbills, advertising copy, popular music and the like are not always kept for the permanent files.



SWAIN CHECKS registered mail to make sure copyright fee has been included with matter for registration. All waste and wrappings such as in picture at left are left on floor until day's receipts are checked and books balanced. Generally speaking, only reason copyright might be refused is that matter contained in samples sent office is not new.



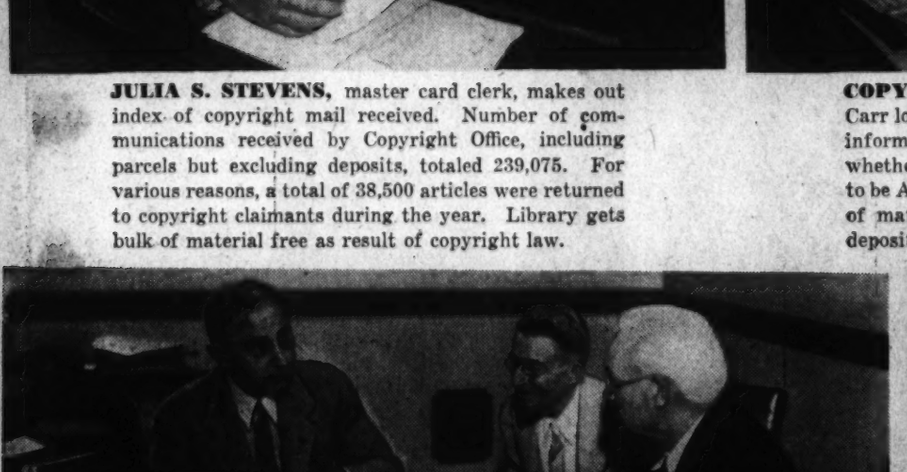
RECORD CARDS are placed in two copies of "The Art of Japanese Gardens" by James J. Holt, mail clerk. As each book is unwrapped, cards with its record are placed inside. Technical reason for refusing copyright might be that copies filed were not of the finest edition. Nothing printed more than 56 years ago has any copyrighting restrictions remaining on it.

JULIA S. STEVENS, master card clerk, makes out index of copyright mail received. Number of communications received by Copyright Office, including parcels but excluding deposits, totaled 239,075. For various reasons, a total of 38,500 articles were returned to copyright claimants during the year. Library gets bulk of material free as result of copyright law.

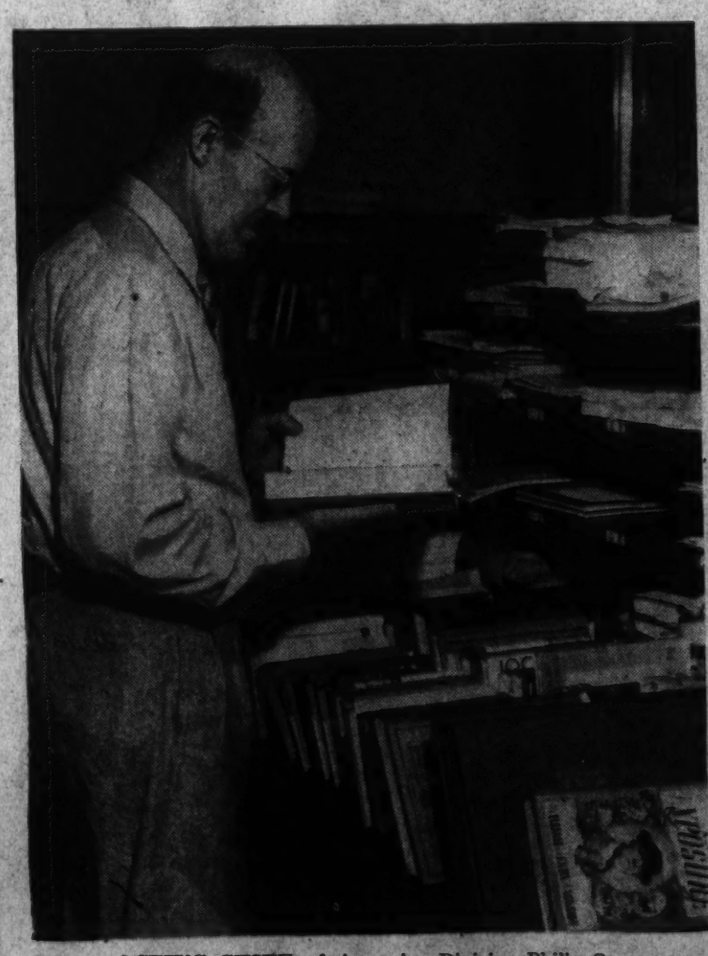
COPYRIGHT EXAMINERS Katharine Wiedman and Catherine Carr look over some sheet music. They check only to see whether all information called for under copyright law is present, not to determine whether copyright should be granted. Citizenship of author needs to be American and address of publisher needs to be in America. Value of material received by Library of Congress because of copyright deposits would run to many thousands of dollars annually.

ENTRY NUMBER of material received for copyrighting is stamped on by Matthew Lyons, in charge of entry number unit. Thirteen different machines for stamping numbers are before Lyons. He uses a different one on each different type of publication. During the 70 years since copyright work has been business of Library, entries have totaled above 7,000,000.

COL. CLEMENT L. BOUVE, Register of Copyrights, confers with Herbert A. Howell, assistant register, and Richard C. DeWolf, senior attorney, about question of whether material received for registration meets copyright requirements.



QUESTIONS concerning copyrights come before revisory board. Dr. Louise Charles Smith, member, Richard C. DeWolf, acting chairman, and Mrs. Maud C. Brady, member, consider one of the appeals sent up to the board.



ACTING CHIEF of Accession Division Philip O. Keeney examines some of the day's supply of new books. The committee on accessions is appointed by the librarian, usually has three members, and is charged with duty of deciding which of books received shall be accepted by the library as part of its collection. Committee meets each day.

DEPOSIT CLERK Charles B. Tranum works in the deposit stacks, wonders what is to be done with stacks and stacks of printed material received daily —but not all of permanent value by any matter of means. Copyrighted stories in newspapers, for instance, rarely are worth keeping as separate documents. Whole newspaper is on file, anyway.

Maps, Rare Books Total Thousands

When the first catalog of Library of Congress was printed in 1802, only 6 atlases and 7 maps were listed. Today, the collection—exclusive of duplicates—includes 838,222 maps and 9,328 atlases, plus views, books and pamphlets. There are about 2,062 manuscript maps among them, with many languages represented.

Although library staff members can read hundreds of languages, some of their manuscripts and rare books are uncataloged and will remain so until a scholar comes along who can decipher them. Recently, for instance, library officials were made very happy by the appearance of a boy who was an expert in languages spoken by some early South African tribes. They put him right to work and soon had their South African collections cataloged.

Some of the finest American books in rare collections are from Mexico and Peru, and were printed almost 100 years before John Smith met Pocahontas.

THREE ORIGINAL Revolutionary War maps from Rochambeau collection are examined by Mrs. Clara Egli Le Gear. Map at top is of Baltimore and shows fort locations. West Point, Va., is in middle and Portsmouth, Va., at bottom. Descriptions of port facilities are in French.

MANUSCRIPT atlas of coasts of Indian Ocean and East Indies is read by Mildred Norvell. The book was made by William Hacke about 1690 and is known as the Buccaneer Atlas because it results from experiences of author on various South Seas expeditions with Capt. Bartholomew Sharpe, notorious buccaneer.

ARTHUR A. HOUGHTON, JR., holds Decretalium of Pope Gregory IX, one of few books with chains in the library. It was printed in Venice in 1486 by Bernardinus de Tridino.

EDWIN B. KENNERLY turns pages of Audubon bird book, largest volume in library collection. It was printed while great ornithologist lived—or long before his fame was widespread.

SHIH C. CHU, assistant chief of Orientalia division, thumbs through rare volume. Languages in library collection run into hundreds and are all-inclusive. Not all can be read by staff members, however.

DR. GARDA HARTMAN, assistant to consultant on Indic Studies, reads Tibetan manuscript. Term "Indic" applies not only to peninsula of India but to nearby territories which have been markedly affected by Indic culture.

Manuscripts Are "Washed and Ironed"

Manuscripts in the Library of Congress are "uncounted," probably uncountable. They range from Chinese scrolls to pencilled notes, and come from many sources. Only a small portion has been purchased. Gifts and "deposits" make up the bulk.

Often gifts and deposits are made with restrictions attached, as is true of Lincoln papers which cannot be used for several years yet—and contents of which are unknown even to library staff.

Picture on front page of this section illustrates wealth of manuscript material. In addition to holding original engrossed copy of Articles of Confederation—within itself a treat—Miss Stout has on table before her Andrew Jackson's manuscript account of the Battle of New Orleans, original manuscript of report on Supreme War Council of World War written by Gen. Tasker H. Bliss, a group of confidential documents from papers of Philippe Bunau-Varilla, one time Minister of Panama to the United States, a collection of autograph notes on national defense written by Admiral Hobson, and document from papers of Jane Addams.

Foremost among acquisitions of historical materials made last year was the Pinckney Family Papers, for purchase of which Congress appropriated $37,500. This collection passed from hands of noted South Carolina family years ago and was bought from New York owner. At financial sacrifice, many families give historic papers to the library to insure their accessibility to students and through them to the public generally.

MANUSCRIPT received for Library of Congress collection gets clear-water bath from Jeannette Sweeney, who uses sponge and rubs carefully. Modern ink could not take such treatment, but typing has made this unnecessary.

AFTER ITS BATH, manuscript is placed in press for drying and wrinkle eliminations. Repair of manuscripts is under authority of Public Printer, just as is repair of books. Last year, total of 47,610 manuscripts were repaired.

SOME ONE-PAGE LETTERS, with no writing on back of page, are mounted on flat sheets. Envelope is saved, too, as additional evidence of date and authenticity. When originals are not available, library seeks photostats. Reproductions of manuscripts relating to United States are secured from many countries.

EDWARD W. FROHNER is "creping" a manuscript—or covering it with mousseline, which is attached with transparent glue and through which reading is easy. Last year, 6,378 manuscripts received this special treatment.

ALICE E. MULLAN puts guards on edge of manuscript, to prevent further roughing or tear. The bindery division "put up" 223 volumes of manuscripts last year. Among them were 20 additional volumes of papers of former President Benjamin Harrison and correspondence of Daniel Reed Larned.

OSCAR LINDQUIST trims crepe from manuscript to leave edges smooth and ready for binding. The Division of Manuscripts often sponsors exhibits of material from its files. During visit of King George VI and Queen Elizabeth material displayed concerned British royal families from fifteenth century.

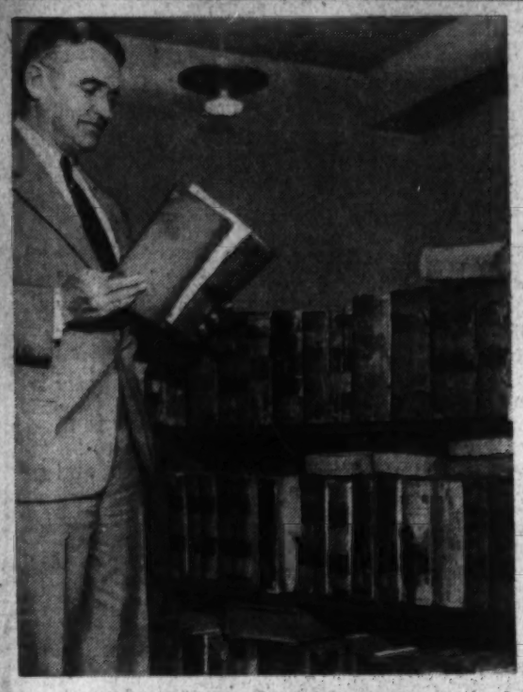
Aging Books Get Faces Lifted

Books cannot be said to have an "average" life. Some of the best preserved books in Library of Congress were printed long before the Pilgrims came to America. The Gutenberg Bible, for instance, still is in its original binding.

The New York City Directory, on the other hand, has to be rebound over and over because of its frequent use. Modern books, generally speaking, are not bound so well as those of the last century and preceding times. Newspapers printed before wood pulp took the place of rags as paper material often are in better condition than those off the presses just a decade ago.

NEXT WEEK

"Our Town in Pictures" for next Sunday will depict activities of Federal Trade Commission and Federal Communications Commission.

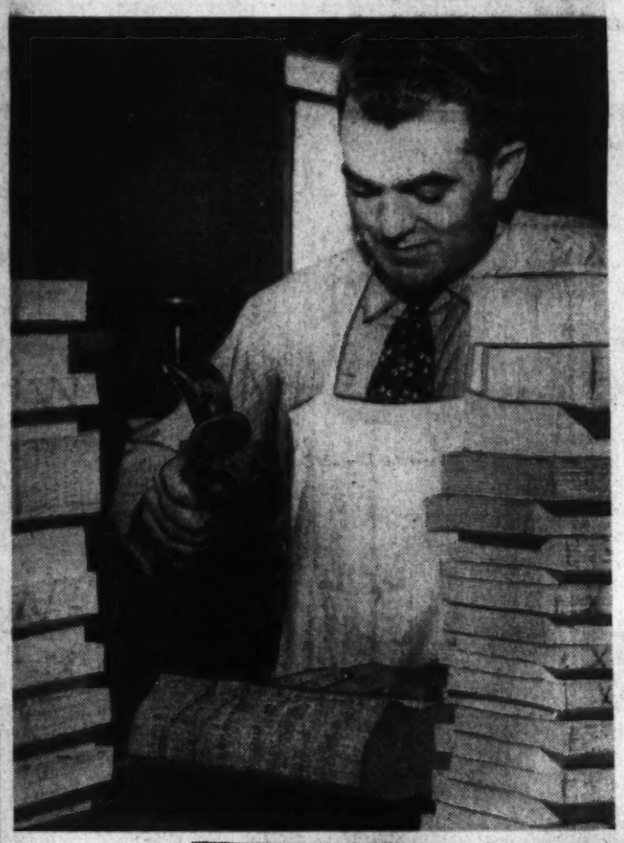


ARTHUR L. HAVERTY examines some old books needing repairs.

MRS. EDNA WRIGHT rips used books apart into sections.

CLAUDIA PATE takes ripped-apart sections, arranges them in order, and sews them back together with stout new thread, treating them as carefully as doctors treat patients.

FRANK GRIFFIN starts backing process. New cover usually makes as much difference in appearance of book as expert facelifting job does in looks of aging movie queen.



BACKS OF books, sewed together straight by Miss Pate, have to be "curved" again by Griffin before cover is fitted on. Workers on this job are not Library of Congress employes, but experts from Government Printing Office. In addition to book rehabilitation work there, GPO also has one of its most up-to-date printing plants in the library building, printing millions of library cards.

SEWED AND rounded, book is ready for new cover which Book Forwarder William Disney here applies—glue and scissors handy beside him. GPO workers at the library total 125. Library cards are printed by them in twelve languages and have a worldwide distribution. Most of them of course, are distributed to libraries and scholars in this country.

WILLIAM Auld puts newbound books under the press. Books bound last year, including newspapers, totaled almost 50,000. Books repaired without rebinding totaled 4,227. Pamphlets stitched into Gaylord binders numbered 24,473. Bindery and job printing section now are located in new annex building. There is no limit to number of times books can be rebound.

LETTERING title of book in gold is job of Hyman Otlin. This is final step in binding of book for library and is also step that has to be taken many times before books need rebinding, just as a matter of rejuvenation. Titles relettered last year, other than those on rebound books, totaled 4,475. Titles on volumes often wear out before cover does.

Newspapers Filed on Film

Newspapers received regularly by the Library of Congress total 917, of which 527 are dailies. Gradually, large bound volumes of many of the papers are being replaced in the files by microfilms. These not only save space and make research easier, but also make for permanency of the record.

1 THE WASHINGTON POST gets microfilmed at library. Laboratory Assistant Walter Weaver here copies page of Post news from a 1905 volume. Because of pulp changes, older papers are better preserved than newer ones.

2 ON THIS REEL are "three bound volumes" or six months of The Post. Photographer William E. Davis rewinds film from drying reel. Newspapers are used extensively by researchers, who find today's news is tomorrow's history.

3 COMPARATIVE SIZE of film reels and bound files are illustrated here. Donald C. Holmes, chief photographer, holds a month of The Post. Nine months, microfilm style, occupy but a small bit of the space occupied by one month bound old style.

4 ON LIBRARY FILM READER, however, pages come back to regular reading size. Margaret Batchelder studies 1905 page, finds this research method infinitely easier, cleaner and quicker than handling big bound volumes.
